REMINISCENCE.

[The following lines which we clip from the Star, relate to Eddie White, deceased, who was a gentle and manly youth of about 17 years of age, son of Mrs Dr. White of Los Angeles and brother-in-law of Hon. M. Morrison, and Col. E. J. C. Kewen:]

When alone in the gray of the evening,
I am thinking the dead past o'er,
And a wreath out of memory weaving
For our Neddie that's gone before.

Then a thought of a face so handsome
I have seen, but shall see no more,
Shall mingle that lonely present
With the hallowed days of yore.

Brother! Is this all of this meeting?
Just a touch of the hand, and adieu?
Just a thrill of the joyous greeting,
And forever be lost to view?

Shall it all go down in the river
Of oblivion, dark and deep;
Shall it fade, like the rainbow's glory,
Or the dreams of a fever's sleep?

Thus, too often in life's lone journey
There are pathways that meet but to part,
And the ghost of our Neddie, departed,
Haunts the innermost shrine of my heart.

To his lips that murmured so sweetly,
That echoed o'er life's drear track,
My heart in its loneliness meekly
Goes lovingly, longingly back.

Brother's eyes in grief or in sadness,
For a moment have gleamed on our sight,
And they gleam on my soul in its sadness,
Like stars from the gloom of the night.

Thus, too often in life's lone journey,
There are pathways that meet but to part,
And the ghost of our Neddie departed,
Haunts the innermost shrine of my heart

A Night in a Lightship.

A little before midnight on Thursday (September 24th) while I was rolling uneasily in my "bunk" contending with sleep and seasickness, and moralizing on those who choose "the sea" for a profession, I was roused—and sickness instantly cured—by the watch on deck suddenly shouting down the hatchway to the mate, "Southsand Head is firing, sir, and sending up rockets." The mate sprang from his bunk and was on the cabin floor before the sentence was well finished. I followed suit, and pulled on coat, nether garments, and shoes as if my life depended on my own speed. There was unusual need for clothing, for the night was bitterly cold. On gaining the deck we found the two men on duty actively at work—the one loading the lee gun, the other adjusting a rocket to its stick. A few hurried questions from the mate elicited all it was needful to know. The flash of a gun from the Southsand Head lightship, about six miles distant had been seen, followed by a rocket, indicating that a vessel had got upon the fatal Goodwins. While the men spoke I saw the bright flash of another gun, but heard no report—owing to the gale carrying the sound to leeward. A rocket followed and at the same moment we observed the light of the vessel in distress just on the southern tail of the Sands. By this time our gun was charged, and the rocket in position. "Look alive, Jack; get the poker," as he primed the gun. Jack dived down the companion hatch; and in another moment returned with a red-hot poker, which the mate had thrust into the cabin fire at the first alarm. Jack applied it in quick succession to the gun and the rocket. A blinding flash and deafening crash were followed by the whiz of the rocket as it sprang with a magnificent curve far away into the surrounding darkness. This was our answer to the Southsand Head light, which having fired three guns and three rockets to attract our attention, now ceased firing. It was also our note of warning to the lookout on the pier of Ramgate Harbor. "That's a beauty," said our mate, referring to the rocket; "get up another, Jack; sponge her well out Jacobs, we'll give 'em another shot in a few minutes." Loud and clear were both our signals, but four and a half miles of distance and a fresh gale neutralized their influence. The lookout did not see them. In less than five minutes the guns and rockets were fired again. Still no answering signal came from Ramsgate. "Load the weather gun," said the mate. Jacobs obeyed, and I sought shelter under the lee of the weather bulwarks, for the wind appeared to be composed of penknives and needles. Our third gun thundered forth and shook the lightship from stem to stern; but the rocket struck the rigging and made a low wavering light. Another was sent up, but it had scarcely cut its bright line across the sky when we observed the answering signal—a rocket from Ramsgate Pier.

That's all right now sir; our work is done," said the mate, as he went below, and quietly turned in while the watch, having sprung out and recovered the gun, resumed their active perambulation of the deck. I confess that I felt somewhat disappointed at the sudden termination of the noise and excitement! I was told that the Ramsgate lifeboat could not well be out in less than an hour. It seemed to my excited spirit a terrible thing that human lives should be kept so long in jeopardy, and of course I began to think, "Is it not possible to prevent this delay?" There was nothing for it however but patience, so I turned in all standing, as sailors have it, with orders that I should be called when the lights of the tug should come in sight. It seemed but a few minutes after, when the voice of the watch was again heard shouting hastily, "Lifeboat close along side, sir. Didn't see it until just this moment. She carries no lights," I bounced out minus a coat, hat and shoes, scrambled on deck just in time to see the Broadstairs lifeboat rush past us before the gale. She was close under our stern, and rendered spectrally visible by the light of our lantern. "What are you firing for?" shouted the coxswain of the boat. "Ship on the sands, bearing south," replied Jack at the top of his stentorian voice. The boat did not pause. It passed with a magnificent rush into darkness. The reply had been heard, and the lifeboat shot straight as an arrow to the rescue. We often hear and read of such scenes, but vision is necessary to enable one to realize the full import of all that goes on. Again all was silent and unexciting on board of the Gull. I went shivering below, with exalted notions of the courage and endurance of life-boat men. Soon after the watch shouted, "Tug's in sight, sir;" and once again, the mate and I went on deck. The Ramsgate life-boat, Bradford, was in tow far astern. As she passed us, the brief questions and answers were repeated, for benefit of the cox-swain of the boat. I observed that every man in the boat lay flat on the thwarts except the coxswain. No wonder. Its not an easy matter to sit up in a gale of wind, with freezing spray, and sometimes green seas, sweeping over one, They were, doubtless, wide awake and listening; but as far as vision went, that boat was manned by ten oilskin coats, and sou'westers. A few seconds took them out of sight; and thus, as far as the Gull lightship was concerned, the drama ended. There was no possibility of our ascertaining more, at least during the night, for whatever might be the result of these efforts, the floating lights had no chance of hearing of them until the next visit of their tender. I was therefore obliged to turn in once more, at 3 A. M. Next forenoon we saw the wreck, bottom up high up the Goodwin Sands. It was that of the good ship Germania, of Bremen.

Manufacture of Castor Oil.

The manufacture of Castor oil has grown to be a very considerable business at Marysville. The Appeal, gives the following description of the Castor oil mill of Dr. McDaniel, a well known gentleman of that city:

We recently visited the Castor oil manufactory of Dr. McDaniel, situated on the common, northwest of the California Pacific Railroad Company's old depot. Being a novice in the preparation and pressing of the Castor bean, and the process employed to obtain pure oil, we were surprised at the simplicity of the machinery and everything connected with the manufacture. The beans are first subjected to a dry heat for about an hour or so in a furnace. This softens them and brings them to that peculiar state required in expeditious pressing. They are then taken out and put into a screw press, run by horse power, and capable of pressing between 80 and 100 gallons of oil per day. From the press the oil is conveyed into a vessel, from thence into a large iron tank or boiler. In this is placed sixty gallons of oil, and the same amount of water, the latter serving to cleanse the oil of all impurities. The whole is then boiled about an hour, and kept standing until the next morning, when the water is drawn off and the oil transferred to the clarifiers, which are composed of zinc, and capable of holding from 80 to 100 gallons each.—After standing about eight hours in the sun it is taken out and put into cans for market. Beans of a superior quality are worth about $90 per ton, and 100 pounds are supposed to produce five gallons of oil.

DEFINING HIS POSITION:—A good story is told of old John McGill, who resided during the war in East Tennessee. Guerillas representing both kept it so warm in that forsaken region that it was dangerous to belong to either side. McGill had, in trying to ride both horses, got several blackjackings from first the Rebels and then the Yankees. As all guerillas dressed alike, he made several mistakes in trying to pass for either Union or Southern, as he thought would suit the case. At last he was overtaken by a party whose politics he could not even guess at, and the following dialogue ensued: "Sir are you a rebel?" "No sir I am not a rebel!" "Then what in the devil's name are you?" "Well sir," hesitated McGill, to tell you the real truth, I'm—nothing—and—but—d—d little of that."

A Good Poker Hand.

A correspondent of the Louisville Courier-Journal tells of a game of poker which will "do for high:"

A party of six of us including the conductor, began a small game of poker in the baggage car at ten cents ante, with a limit of twenty chips, (an ear of corn supplied the spondulix in this instance,) and I put in the brandy as my share, being naturally on allowance, having borrowed all that Halderman and Henderson had about them. Well the brandy went in about fifteen minutes, ane before we reached the first station, they had froze me out. But a "vongeance was mine." A puff of wind came tearing worse than a steam engine through the woods, scattering the corn, dispersing the cards, revealing the odd aces and kings stuck up the fellows' sleeves and boot legs, and carrying away two straw hats from the heads of a couple of lucky (or unlucky) gamblers. The conductor very politely stopped the train and sent a man back half a mile or so to look after the missing chapeaux, but they were as disordered as a load of hay upset, and altogether unwearable.

This naturally demoralized the party, but we were soon enlivened by the appearonce of a Cincinnati sport going to the Springs, and a Louisville clothier going to New Orleans, who began to play a lively game, twenty-five cents ante and no limit at all. Our sympathies were soon on the side of Louisville who played a square game and against Cincinnati, who rung in all the foul tricks he knew. Louisville was a little, dark haired, bright-eyed man, a German and a Jew, but as honest as day. Cincinnati was a big, red-faced mustachio, pretty sharp and thoroughly unscrupulous.

When Cincinnati had won about three hundred dollars, one of us took Louisville aside, and told him what was going on, while another stuck an ace up one sleeve and a king up another.

"Now" said they, "he's been cheating you from the first, and if you want to get even, you must do as we tell you."

Louisville said he would. They told him to wait until he got two aces or two kings, then fetch down one of the odd cards from his sleeve, and to "go in."

The very next hand he got four kings.

They began to bet. Cincinnati saw his ten and went him five better. Louisville went him fifty better. Cincinnati raised him a hundred. Louisville called him. There were nearly seven hundred dollars on the table, and Cincinnati laid down four aces. Louisville raked the money in his lap and laid down five kings!

"Why" said Cincinnati, "that's barefaced swindling."

"Swindlin' pe damn," says Louisville. "It's pen swindlin' all de time," bringing his fist down flat.

"Go in, Israel," says a voice.

"Well," says Cincinnati, rising, "I think I'll just fight on that."

"Oh my Abednego," says another voice.

But little Louisville rose up, and poking out his neck and his hands as far as they would reach, he says: "Fight, is it? By G—d I fight you mit de bowie-knife, mit de pistol, mit de Derringer, mit de Colt's navy, mit de gun, mit de sword, mit de cannon, or mit de damn'd old muskit mit de bayonet! I fights you mit anyding, an' I fights you right now. Vich you choose?"

Cincinnati concluded he would'nt fight. He said the crowd was against him, declared he couldn't get fair play, and got off at the next station.

A GREAT CROP.—The cotton crop of the Southern States is computed this year at 3,114,593 bales. This is a larger cotton crop than has been grown since 1861, and has only been exceeded three or four times in the history of the country. The prospects for the next crop are reported to be still better. The South has recovered its old prestige in producing cotton, which has always been the chief source of its prosperity.

The first Frenchman killed during the war was a non-commissioned officer named Pagnion. He fell in a skirmish at Neiderbronn. He served during the Italian and Mexican campaigns, and was decorated with the Legion of Honor and the military medal. A German corporal got 30 thalers for knocking him over.

Berlin is growing more rapidly than any other city in Europe, having come up from the eighth capital city in 1832, with a population of 250,000, to the third in 1869, with 800,000 inhabitants—a number only exceeded by London and Paris.

The law reducing Internal Revenue taxes went into active operation October 1.

Swam away From a Husband.

The following amusing story is copied from the Yreka Journal, of the 21st inst.

A rustic damsel of some fifteen summers was wooed by a young man down on Hat Creek, in Pitt River valley, and the parents were greatly in favor of his attentions to their daughter. The match seemed to have been made by the old folks, the girl consented, and the happy bridegroom got a license from Shasta. The day arrived, the magistrate and all the invited guests were present, and everything appeared to be going on merrily until about a couple of hours before the ceremony was to take place. The young lady, seeing no other chance to avoid the hymenial knot, broke and ran. On reaching Hat Creek, she tied her clothes in a bundle, fastened them on her head, and swam across the stream. She then proceeded to Pitt River, a very deep, swift stream, a hundred yards in width, and swam that in the same manner. Her would-be lord, and parents, and friends, gave chase, but there being no boat to cross in, were unable to catch her. A party, however, went up to the ferry, a few miles above, where they made a diligent search, finding her some three or four hours afterward, at a house on the opposite side of the river. That young lady evidently does not generally ask, "Mother, may I go out to swim?" The last heard of the would-be husband, he was trying to sell his license for about half price.

The Cathedral at Metz.

There have been enthusiasts, who, forgetting Amiens and Charters, have pronounced Metz Cathedral the most perfect Gothic work on the Continent. It is certainly beautiful, light, and its spire shoots up like a fountain above the forests of carved peaks and frotted pinnacles below. Begun 1014 by Bishop Thierri, the ghost of that worthy prelate remained restless and repining till 1546, when it was finished. So, after all, even Catholic zeal had its cold fits. The vergers tell you it is 375 feet long, and that the spire is of the same height. The nave is 51 feet wide and 109 feet high. The great stone ark is pierced with innumerable portholes, and these windows were filled in 1526 by Busch, of Strasbourg, with stained glass, just in time before the art became lost. Its beautiful open work spire, light as if carved of wood, carries an enormous bell the very palladium of Metz, weighing about 28,600 pounds, and called La Mutte. The font, called the Cuve de Cæsar, is probably an old Roman tomb. The chief curiosities of the cathedral are stone thrones of the early Bishops, two professional crosses of the twelfth and fourteenth centuries, an embroidered red silk cape, said to be Charlemagne's, and a dragon of pasteboard and canvas, formerly used in street processions, and called La Cracelli. People who want to see the walls and gardens of the esplanade, or the strong redonbt called the Pate, which can be turned into an island by closing the sluices on the Selle, should mount the cathedral spire, first ascending the clerestory gallery to see the stained glass and the flying buttresses. The view of Metz from the spire is a fine one.—[All the Year Round.

Too Poor to Take a Paper.

The Antioch Ledger relates the following, which is not the only case that might be put on record, by any means:

We met one of these objects of pity last week. He was "actually too poor to take a paper; times were too hard; hadn't time to read," etc. We really pitied this man—he looked so poor, and mean, and mangy generally, that we supposed him to be one of God's forgotten ones, dropped into the world without the means of getting a livelihood or the ability to feed himself. But later in the day we saw him hilariously drunk, treating a crowd, each "round" costing him a dollar and a half. It's a strange fact. Men will refuse to take their home paper on the plea that "times are too hard," and yet they will hang themselves by the chin to a bar, and "gin up" at an expense of four or five dollars. They can't spend five dollars a year for a paper, but can invest five hundred in whiskey. Such men are poor—and poor citizens too. If the county were filled with such, it would be bankrupt in a year.

GOOD MEN MAKE GOOD HORSES.—A horse is never vicious or intractable without a direct cause. If a horse is restive or timorous, you may be sure that these faults arise from defects in his education. He has been treated either awkwardly or brutally. Commence the education of the horse at his birth; accustom him to the presence, voice and sight of men; and speak and act gently; caress him; and do not startle him. All chastisement or cruelty confuses the animal and makes him wild. They are good men who make good horses.

ANAHEIM GAZETTE.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1870.

ADVERTISERS.

We ask the indulgence of our advertisers, for any apparent disorder in the make up of this number, and assure them that a proper classification will take place in the next issue.

THE "GAZETTE"

Well, here is the Anaheim GAZETTE. After various delays and annoyances, incident to establishing a business, our paper goes forth to the light of day in tolerable good order.

Elsewhere we give a few scraps of the many things published of us. Many other things privately said have reached our private ear. In substance, the latter amount to but this: Our jealous acquaintances say we will not succeed; that the resources of the City of Anaheim and the Southern portion of the county, are not sufficient to support a newspaper. Our friends (thank heaven we have six,) say never was there so bright a prospect, the time is ripe, and you, Barter, have occupied the field.

In both these expressions the "wish" is parent to the "opinion," and both are mere rattling, half digested words. We are much inclined to side with the opinion of our friends. However as the days of prophecy have passed some thousands of years, and as the future is all unknown even for one short hour, time alone must determine the success of the "Gazette". Only grant that we know more of our own affairs and of the newspaper business, than those who pass adverse opinions upon us, and who for the most part have passed their obscure lives, pitchfork in hand within the purlieus of some congenial Barn-yard, and we are satisfied.

OUR COURSE.

It is but natural that the people should inquire what attitude, politically or otherwise, a newspaper is to assume, whenever one is established among them. To meet then, this inquiry, we volunteer a statement of the Policy of the GAZETTE, so far as is now known to its Editor:.

For the present or until some strong political feeling in the land may oblige us to treat of politics, we propose to ignore them altogether. We have stated in our Prospectus, that we were to be "Independent," and to be Independent, means, simply to sustain the best men and measures for the common good, so far as the same appears to the editor and proprietor of a newspaper.

We, fortunately, engage in publishing this paper by own reason and will, untrammeled by any, and compelled in no way to support any faction or institution; and so help us Jupiter, as we value freedom and independence, we will try to sustain this attitude.

If there is one trait in the human mind, that can be called despicable and which brands its possessor as a first class scoundrel, it is that one which actuates the giving forth of personal vituperation, and assailing the character of another, through the medium of the Press. We loath and despise it. We were raised in a different school of writers; and had we not been, our instincts would naturally recoil from such a course. Yet, should we, now and then see proper to administer a wholesme rebuke, or admonition to certain insolent curs, that ill winds have occasionally brought us into unwilling contact with throughout this State, our readers will bear in mind that we know whereof we speak, that the GAZETTE is our own newspaper, and that we reserve that especial privilege from the start.

OUR DRY SEASON.

The dry season has drawn to a close, the bountiful rains of an approaching winter are upon us. The temporary check to the growth and prosperity of Southern California, produced by the drouth need give no cause of alarm, for among all our people, few there are indeed who do not find themselves better off to day, than at the beginning of the year. In the valley of Anaheim, happily there is no doubt of this, for our people have raised abundant crops of corn and vegetables and the wine has turned out largely in excess of any other season. Let our people be of good cheer, for the future of this valley is as full of hope and promise as any in the whole country.

CROWDED OUT.—Two columns of advertisements have been unavoidably left out of this issue; they will appear in our next.

Causes of Delay.

It was the intention that the GAZETTE should issue, first, on the 22d of October, but before that date approached, two causes occurred, which put such a result out of the question. The first of these was a drunken printer, the second a sick printer. At the outset, we employed, as foreman, a man of such age as we thought would render us signal service, by his experience and counsel. Alas! how grievously were we deceived. The old hypocrite had been in the army—was constitutionally opposed to labor—and had not seen a sober day since his boyhood. Naturally enough, the Anaheim wine was too much for him. He got drunk at the start, and remained blind, speechless drunk, during his brief term of two weeks in our employ. We had "pi" to set. He set at it. Daily we looked at the "pi," but where it decreased in one place it increased in another, until necessity compelled a speedy dissolution of our business connection. Next, we heard of a competent man at Los Angeles, and engaged him by telegraph. The stage being on the wrong tack that day, we hired a vehicle and drove to Los Angeles, and triumphantly returned with our new foreman, who swore he would abide with us during his natural life. Well, you all remember the terrible wind storm we had lately; it was that wind that settled it. No dust which I possessed could induce him, with a "bustid" blood vessel and weak lungs, to remain longer. With promises to send us another man, and regretting, in a nameless amount, that his health compelled him to go, he left us. Then we telegraphed; we wrote; we scoured; but the printers were all either drunk or sick. At last, we obtained one from Wilmington and another from San Bernardino; and to this good fortune our subscribers are indebted, for even this late appearance of the GAZETTE.

Kill the Carpenters.

During the week, our city was visited by three billious looking "critters," who "hang up" at San Gabriel, and pay tribute to Los Angeles. They growled, and said "Anaheim would never amount to anything, because it would not grow." We advise our dyspeptic neighbors to read the Book of Fate; for is it not written therein, that the only way to prevent the growth of Anaheim, is to kill off the Carpenters? Yea, verily.

Extra Session of the Legislature.

The advisability of having an extra Session of the Legislature is being discussed throughout the upper portion of the State. The especial need which presents itself, is the making of a new apportionment under the census of 1870, in order that the counties be properly and fully represented at the next regular Session. Let us have an extra Session—let us have justice.

RACE COURSE.—A couple of landed proprietors of our city contemplate establishing a race course between here and Santa Ana, at no very distant day.

WHAT THE NEWSPAPERS SAY.

Following we give a few of the numerous complimentary notices received by us from the Press, throughout the State:

NEW PAPER.—We have received the prospectus for the publication of the Anaheim GAZETTE, at Anaheim, Los Angeles county, by Geo. W. Barter. Mr. Barter was for some time one of the publishers of the Los Angeles Daily Star. The GAZETTE will be issued about the 20th instant, and will advocate the general interest of the surrounding country, and is established to aid in the division of the county. Send us one.—Santa Barbara Times.

The accomplished young editor Geo W. Barter, (formerly a reporter on the San Francisco Bulletin, and lately connected with the Los Angeles Star,) one of the best newspaper men upon the coast; will launch a craft in Anaheim in a few weeks, to be called the GAZETTE. We wish him success. Anaheim is almost entirely made up of Germans—and who ever saw a German that did not take the papers?—San Diego Bulletin.

ANAHEIM GAZETTE.—The Anaheim Gazette, a new weekly paper is to be issued by G. W. Barter one of the founders of the Los Angeles Daily Star. The initial number will appear on or about, October 22. Mr B. is a polished writer, and experienced newspaper man, and while connected with the Star, added largely to the interest of that journal.—Los Angeles News.

WE have received from Geo. W. Barter, the prospectus of the Anaheim GAZETTE, the first number of which is to appear on the 22, instant. The paper will be devoted to local interests, and the creation of the new county of Anaheim.—Marysville Appeal.

A Local Nerd.

Nowhere in the State is there so much need of a Savings and Loan Bank, as here at Anaheim. Within a radius of two miles from the business center, are numerous wealthy, industrious, prosperous citizens, who each year handle large sums of money. It is no uncommon thing for our Vinyardists to have large and direct financial transactions with San Francisco and New York and at such times they have no ready means of exchange. For safety and satisfaction, they mostly prefer to keep their funds within immediate command and hence deposit with Langenberger & Co, Heiman & George or other merchants of our city, instead of placing sums to their order in the banks at Los Angeles, San Francisco or New York.

Unless an occasional and doubtful draft is picked up, their only means of transmission is with coin through the express—too slow, old and cumbersome a way altogether.

Many of our people lend out their money, while still others require an occasional loan. The wants of the whole Southern part of the county, equally with our own would be greatly served and adequately met, by a well established Bank under the management of such men as have the confidence of the people.

SANTA ANA TO THE SEA.—The extensive scope of fine agricultural land lying between the Santa Ana and the Ocean, is rapidly being occupied by settlers. The San Joaquin Rancho embracing a tract of nearly one hundred thousand acres, is being sub-divided and thrown into market. Mrs Williams, near Tustin City offers 500 acres of her ranch for sale in lots of forty acres and upwards. All along the Santa Ana Valley transactions in real estate are of daily occurrence and ere another season passes that section will be covered with a thousand green and cultivated fields. Who shall stay our prosperity? Not man, when Providence is at the helm.

RAIN, RAIN.—A well directed and thoroughly wet rain, set in at this place on Sunday evening last, and, with the exception of a few intervals of sunshine, continued until Wednesday night. It penetrated deep down into the soil set the grass to growing, laid the dust, washed off the trees and thoroughly purified the atmosphere. This heavy rain is supposed to have been sent us, in answer to the united prayers of Los Nietos, in Camp-Meeting assembled. Pray again, Brethern, and keep it up.

SNOW.—During the late rains, the Mountains back of the city became covered with snow, apparently from their center upwards. This snow still remains and has considerable effect upon the temperature hereabouts. When fire rages upon the mountains it perceptibly raises the temperature. We also feel a corresponding change resulting from their being covered with snow.

NEW BUILDING.—The new two story building erected by M. Calisher Esq and the proprietor of the GAZETTE, is about completed and will be occupied both by the GAZETTE establishment and the General Merchandise Store of Mr. Calisher, during the coming week. The building has been erected by Mr. D. K. Williams, and reflects considerable credit upon his qualifications as a builder.

MISSED THE LANDING.—On her down trip the Steamer Senator, Capt. Connor, missed the landing owning to prevalence of a heavy gale at Sea. Hence the freight (eighty-five tons) consigned to this place was not discharged until her return trip on Tuesday night last.

PLOWING.—We notice that several of the farmers around the city are already engaged in plowing and otherwise preparing for an early seed time.

ATTENTION.—We call attention to the advertisement of R. Slaney's Boot and Shoe Emporium at Los Angeles. The most complete assortment can be found at this establishment.

THE Teachers' County Institute is in session at Los Angeles, and the participants are evidently having a very interesting time. Nearly every public school teacher in the county is present. The deliberations are presided over by W. M. McFadden, County Superintendent. The session will probably close to-da.

CITY COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

SESSION OF MONDAY, OCT. 17, 1870.

Report of Finance Committee—Action in relation to salary of Assessor—Progress of the Jail—Permission granted Wartenburg to erect a Slaughter House—Committee on Fire Limits—Ordinances to be published in the GAZETTE—Chain Gang to be organized—Etc., Etc.

At the session of the Council, of the above date, there were present John Fischer, President, and Councilmen Zeyn, Kroeger and Champlin.

The Clerk, Mr. Kulp, called the roll and read the proceedings of the previous meeting, after which said minutes were so amended as to make them read that, "lumber ordered of P. Banning & Co. for the building of a jail, was ordered by the Council" and not by a Committee of the Council.

The Finance Committee reported favorably on report of the Treasurer for the month of September, and the report of the Mayor for the same period They also reported unfavorably on a communication of the City Assessor, asking for an increase on his salary of $50 00 per annum, to cover incidental expenses, including stationery. After discussion it was decided by the Council that the Assessor might present bills for said incidentals for their consideration and which would probably be allowed.

A petition from Louis Wartenberg was read, asking permission to erect a slaughter house, as provided by ordinance, outside and at the south gate of old Anaheim. On motion such permission was granted for the period of five years.

Mr. Fischer announced that the committee on Fire Limits had three weeks longer in which to report.

On motion it was ordered that all City Ordinances be published successively, one time each, in the columns of the Anaheim GAZETTE.

The Mayor stated that on completion of the jail, a chain gang would be organized for working upon and cleaning the streets.

On motion it was ordered that the Finance Committee act also, as a Committee on Printing.

The Council then adjourned.

SESSION OF OCT. 24, 1870.

At this session, there were present John Fischer President; and Councilmen Kroeger, Zeyn, Goodrich and Champion.

It was stated that the time of lease of the Council room would expire November 1, and therefore steps must be taken to secure another hall or continue the lease.

Bill of Mr. Brookbank $2 00 and that of H. Horsman $47 00 for chairs, were received and referred to the Finance Committee.

The Permit granting certain privileges to L. Wartenburg was read, signed, adopted and executed.

Discussion arising concerning assessments it was determined that the time for completing assessments would expire on November first.

On motion the Council then adjourned.

Latest War News.

The latest war news by telegraph announces that all peace negotiations have failed, and that the fate of battles alone must decide affairs in Europe.

Sorties from Paris are often made, and frequently successful.

On the 27th, two bodies of Germans mistaking each other for the enemy, fought for hours, and lost heavily.

The Germans are apparently concentrating at Rheims.

The Prussians have announced that they would commence the bombardment of Paris on Saturday, 29th October. A large portion of the army of the Duke of Mecklenburg is moving hastily towards Paris.

Two German cruizers were recently captured by the French in the English Channel, and burned.

Garbaldi has acted vigorously, and has taken many prisoners and cannon, and accomplished the object for which he went north.

Empress Eugenie repudiates all efforts to enthrone either herself or Napoleon. Hentopes are all for her boy, and says she will hold herself aloof from political intrigues until peace is restored.

The Prussians investing Verdun recently sent a communication to the Mayor of that town, demanding its surrender. The Mayor indignantly refused and challenged the Prussians to come forward and take it.

News from Metz is important. Rumors have again been made current in the Prussian army, that Bazaine was dead but they are now proved false.

CIRCUS.—It is expected by many that the Circus of Lee & Co., now performing at Los Angeles, will visit Anaheim and give an exhibition here.

Society or communities, can not be afflicted with a more deplorable evil, or cursed with a more malignant scourge than the Slanderer. Contagious diseases, and epidemics have their reign for a brief period, but a faith in Divine mercy, and the application of such remedies as God in his wisdom has placed in the hands of the skillful and scientific, deprives them of the power of inspiring that fear and dread which all experience who are exposed to the poisonous influence of the tongue of the slanderer. Assasin-like they deliver their thrusts in secret, under cover of darkness, and the innocent victims of their malice, receives a fatal wound before he is aware of the presence of a foe. No one is beyond their reach, the high and the lowly, the virtuous and innocent, of every age and sex are alike subject to the infamous attacks of this curse of society. Even the sacred confines of the tomb are invaded, and the memory of a departed friend or relative, whom death has rendered incapable of resenting a foul calumnly, reflecting on their former character, is mercilessly maligned, and falsely represented.

Morally and physically a coward, the slanderer never makes a direct attack by which he can be held amenable to the laws, but from some secure position he singles out his victim, and by means of well-conceived inundoes, and malignant fabrications circulated in secret, the unfortunate individual whose character has been stained by the pestilential breath of the slanderer, becomes an object of suspicion, is shunned by society and doomed to disgrace without knowing for what or why. Cowardly and dishonest, the slanderer, aware of his own deficiencies morally and mentally, attempts to build a reputation for himself at the expense of others; but by a decree of a just Providence, slanderers often over reach themselves, and their excreted spite, venom and malice, is only cast forth to rebound to their own discomfiture, and as one substance naturally attracts its own kind, their own polluted carcasses are more effectually enveloped in the slime of iniquity, apparent and repulsive to all beholders.

The lowest, most depraved, degraded, and abhorrent object which crawls viper like over the earth, cursed with the instinct and evil passion of the devil, and bearing some outward semblance to humanity, is a detected slanderer. Engulfed and entangled in the foul and poisonous atmosphere of its own breath, despised, jeered, scorned by man, who detects its presence by the same means that he traces the course of a snail—by its slime—it is shunned and considered beneath his notice—too insignificant to castigate, the detected slanderer is let severely alone, for the same reason that we refuse to disturb a cess pool, or shun an engagement with a skunk, the more we stir them the more offensive they are.—[Santa Clara Index.

THE FORTIFICATIONS OF PARIS.—The fortifications of Paris were constructed in the reign of Louis Phillippe. They consist of bastioned and terraced walls; faced with masonry, and surrounded by a ditch of a breadth varying from 60 to 100 feet. The general outline is of an irregular oval form, nearly twenty-two miles in circumference, and enclosing an area of nineteen thousand two hundred and seventy-two acres, or eighty miles, and a population of one million and a half persons. The axis of the oval from north to south is nine thousand seven hundred yards, and that from east to west is twelve thousand three hundred yards. Around the encite, or circuit of the wall, are ninety-four angular forts, with areas of about three hundred and thirty-eight square yards each. There are, besides, seventeen casemented fortresses, located at the principal approaches, and connected by sunken roads. Inside the walls a carriage way is laid out, and also a circular railway, connecting all the railroad lines running into Paris. At various points in the wall there are sixty-five entrances, of which fifty are gates, ten are railway arches, and four are posterns.

PRESERVED GRAPES.—The San Francisco Bulletin says:

Lusk, a well known fruit grower, of Oakland, claims to have discovered a method by which grapes may be preserved for a long time, without losing their fullness, freshness or flavor. The grapes are not packed away in bunches, but are placed singly in layers. A recent examination of a sample lot put up some years ago, resulted very favorably—the fruit looking as bright and clear as any that was offering in the market.

CHAMPAGNE, it is believed, will be very scarce for several years, in consequence of the districts producing that wine and the great depots of Rheims and Challons, with their millions of bottles, having been occupied by the German armies. This year's vintage is destroyed, and the damage to the owners of the vineyards, the wine-makers, and the merchants, it is calculated, will exceed $20,000,000. Of course the Champagne wines will still be produced and in greater abundance than ever, so that the manufacturers of cider will profit by the war.

Why have widows the right to flirt? Because the Bible says the widow's mite.
