GOING SHOPPING.

"When you going to Philadelphy, Mart?" asked Mrs. Santha Ann Greenway, as she rinsed the coffee cups and placed them on the waiter. "To-morrer? I'm so glad! My chicken and butter money is come to consid'able this quarter, an' I want lots o' new things. Think you could git e'm? Seems a pity for me to lose a whole day, an' spend more'n two dollars on them pesky kears, when you've got to go on business. I guess you could suit me; you use'ter do all yer mother's shopping."

"Well, I could try, Santhy Ann; but I don' know. Women's fixin's is so curious! What you got to git?"

"I've got to have some caliker gowns, fust an' foremost, I s'pose, and Achsy wants a few fixin's. However, it won't trouble you much, for I'll have 'em all writ out. An', father, you must git some homespun for yourself. You reely hain't got nothin' much 'sides your weddin' suit, an' mussy knows that one's to be wore out, though it don't look disrespectable yet; only I never liked them swallow's tails."

"Pa going to the city!" asked Achsa Jane, a girl of 16, coming in with a big loaf of rye bread hot from the kitchen stove. "Oh, pa, please do take me!"

"He can't, Achsy; not just yit," said her mother. "You wouldn't want to go with your last year's bonnet on, that you ain't willin' to wear to picnics even. You'd better set down what things you cant do without very well, but you must make the list short, Achsy, 'bless your father should git more than he expects—more money, I mean."

"I'll make two lists," said Achsa, laughing—"one for short fodder, the other for long. Well, I forgot," she added as her mother looked her disapprobation: "I mean money."

"She's a reg'lar boy, mother," said the farmer, with a chuckle, "an' she 'always will be."

"You'll take the big spring wagon, I s'pose," said his wife. "I wish you'd git that five gallon can full of oil."

* * * * * * *

Santha Ann had been imposed upon by some good neighbor of limited knowledge, and thought that all the barrooms in all the principal cities had been closed. Mart had never in his life been, "so to say, drunk; but once or twice he had been overcome to the extent of taking a broomstick for Santha Ann, and sour milk for molasses; still, that was in the dusk of long years ago. As a general thing, he never touched the "critter," as his wife called it.

Mart sat jauntily behind his grays, speculating on the probability of coming back full handed. He had secretly put a little money for speculation in the hands of a business friend, quite prepared to lose it, but still hopeful. Scarcely had he reached the city when he met this same old acquaintance.

"Good news for you!" cried the latter. "I made a little cool hundred for you on that venture. Do you want the money now, or shall I invest again?"

"Well, I rayther guess I'll take it now," said Mart, with bounding pulses, "an' try again some other time. I'm in for business, and there's lots to be done for the folks to home. They don't know nothing about this, you see, an' I kinder want to surprise 'em."

"Very good; you don't have it. Come right in here to this restaurant, and I'll settle with you."

The two men entered. Lunch was ordered, and with the lunch wine.

"I told Santhy Ann I wouldn't drink no liquor," said Mart. "You see, it goes to my head before I know it, an' I've got considerable business to do."

"Liquor! You wouldn't call this mild and harmless beverage liquor, I hope! It has positively no intoxicating effects. You might drink sixty glasses, and then think and walk straight. I've drank it all my life."

"Well, seein's you say," said the easy farmer, "I s'pose I may just drink a little. Only one glass will do."

But mechanically Mart drank as often as his friend filled up the glass, and though he was conscious of no loss of steadiness, still he was so far under its influence that he hardly knew where he was after he had found his way to the first class store to which Santha Ann had directed him.

"What will you have?" asked the polite clerk.

"I'll hev a cheer, providin' you can 'commodate me," said Mr. Mart, looking impassively at the clean shaved face before him. "I feel a little top heavy."

A chair was brought. Mart took off his hat, placed it on the floor, and sat down. Then he began to fumble in his pockets, first his coat, then his trousers, then his vest, and finally, to the amusement of two or three of the clerks ranged round, who were watching the proceedings, he turned the list out of an inside pocket of his vest, together with Santha Ann's roll of bills.

"Bleege me by reading them 'ere, if you please," he said, with a solemn roll of his eye, giving the list to the clerk. "Santha Ann's wrote what she wants."

"Indeed, my friend, I can't make it out," said the clerk, after looking it over. "K-a-d-i-k-e-r,' I suppose that means calico," he said, after spelling it out.

"Well, yes, I s'pose so, Santha Ann's more of a scholard than I be," said the farmer. "Let me see. I guess I can git through it. Yes, I see, kaliker; seed-sucker—I don't know what that is; cotton, a hundred yards, that means spool cotton. I cal'late; ball baby stockings; I wonder whose baby she means; we ain't got none. Catch a mare—well, that is cur'us. I don't catch no mares on this expedition."

"She probably means seersucker—an article for ladies' dresses—Balbriggan stockings, and cashmere," said the clerk, politely, behind a smothered laugh.

"Well, I'm glad you know—I don't," was Mart's answer; and together they made out the list.

You had better take yo r cotton and needle by the box; we always sell that way to parties out of town," said the clerk. Here is something I think means satteen," he added, as he pointed to a word underlined—it was satinet. Well, we'll put these up to the best of our ability, and have them ready for you in an hour."

Very well," said Mart, thickly. I'll be here by that time. Help yourself out o' them twenty-five dollars, and git me the change if there is any; if not, I've got plenty of cash;" and he swaggered out of the store.

At a late hour he came back, his wagon so loaded up that there was scarcely room to stow away the numerous bundles brought out of the dry goods houses. His gait was unsteady and his speech almost unintelligible by this time, for he had imbibed several times since lunch, and even bought some of the articles to take home with him.

Meantime, his womenfolks passed a happy and comfortable day. There was little work to do, and no dinner to cook. Santha Ann got out her sewing machine and gave it a thorough overhauling preparatory to the work she was expecting to begin on the morrow. Achsa anticipated the sensation she should make in her new hat with a bunch of blood-red poppies perched atop.

"It would be nice to set in the congregation, so folks could see," she said, half regretfully, to her mother. Up in the choir nobody knows whether you have new things or not."

"They'll know it, Achsy," said her mother, reflectively. "Hats is cuspikyus nowadays."

"I guess we'll have tea, Achsy," said her mother. "I'm kinder goose fleshy; a cup o' hot tea 'll do us good all round."

The meal over, Santha Ann washed the dishes in silence. Seven, 8, 9 o'clock struck, and still no sign of the deacon.

At 10 Santha Ann went out, for the twentieth time, and peered down the moonlighted road. She was very uneasy; but when she reflected that Mart had a good deal of business to attend to, and Achsa suggested that he had on one or two occasions before staid overnight, she gave him up at 11, and they all went to bed, the widow included, who kept her own counsel.

Could they have seen not more than two miles from home, in a secluded hollow, the object of their solicitude fast asleep, the jaded horses asleep as well, as the moonlight falling upon the portly figure of the deacon, whose hat was pulled down over his face, they would hardly have dreamed of midnight assassins, boarding house expenses, and cattle feed, as did Santha Ann the whole night long.

All would have been well, for the deacon at least, if, as t.e sun rose and he rose too, he had not applied to the bottle for comfort. Some way he dreaded to meet Santha Ann, when he realized that he had been all night coming home and his befogged brain craved more of the stimulant which had so basely betrayed him.

At early sunrise the three women sat down to breakfast, and that meal over, came the fight of horses' feet and a shrill voice being about the bush to the tune of "We w-won't" (very loud) "go home till morning; we w-won't" (still louder) "go home till Sunday morning, chic anyhow."

"Santhy chic, ole girl, come out here—gee up. Dobbs—come out here! I've brung ye home a chic present—half a dozen of 'em—come along, Santhy—long a long—upsy dumpsey, Santhy Ann."

Well, the disgraceful truth was out. Santha, seeing the horror struck face of the widow, as well as the pity in her eyes, straightened herself at once. Her pride took fire.

"Achsy," she said, with flashing eyes, "your father's been mighty lucky or he wouldn't 'a took a single glass o' beer. I shouldn't wonder if he'd made a thousand dollars!"

Then they both went out. The farmer was literally singing happy. He sang as he shook hands, sang as he unloaded, roared when he saw the widow, and wanted to dance with her; and finally, after drinking a strong cup of tea, he sat down somewhat subdued, while the widow discreetly left and went into the kitchen.

"Well, Santhy," laughed her husband, as the hired man took the horses away, "see if I haven't remembered ye! An' I didn't look no liquor; I only took some beverage once or twice."

Santha Ann gave him a look.

"Well, I didn't, Santhy Ann; you can look for yerself. There's the articles, but I don't know what they be." Then he sat back and snored.

Come to immediate.

"Seems's if I might tell so musical inclined for a year. See, there's a carpets sweeper, an' a cradle, an' an ice screamer, an' lots more things."

"Man alive!" exclaimed Santha Ann, in dismay; "what on earth do we want of a carpet sweeper? We haven't got a carpet in this house!"

"Git some, then. Santhy Ann—it lots of 'em they're cheap, laying round loose at that store. Git plenty, or the carpet sweeper 'll be kinder lonesome," he added, with a maudlin grin.

"And what do we want of a cradle?" was the next question.

"Well, it sort o' reminded me, Santhy Ann, looking far back'ard into futer years, that we was all babies once—all babies once! Santhy Ann, the recollection was kind o' subdu'n', an' I sort o' wanted it that everything to pertitate over. You know it's from the cradle to the grave. The good Book tells us, Santhy Ann, 'Beloved brethren, we're all pilgrims an' travelers'; an' even Bunyan's 'Pilgrim's Progress' laid its infant head in a cradle. So I just got it for a remembrancer, Santhy Ana—from the cradle to the grave!"

He took out his handkerchief and held it to his eyes. Achsa flounced out of the room, and with an expletive not at all filial ran up to her own room.

"But what do you mean by an ice creamer?" tearfully urged his wife; "that thing with the churn handle?"

"That is it, Achsy Ann—I mean Santhy Jane; you kin make gallons of ice cream for Achsy an' me."

"But we never see ice here," cried his wife, at her wits' end.

"Hire Spot pond next winter, Santhy Ann; jest hire Spot pond, the hull of it, an' we'll hev a corner in ice ourselves an' make 'nough ice cream to last all winter."

"Lot's o' sheet music for Achsy; nough to last her as long as she lives. Got it at Hargie, Santhy Ann—get 'em all at bargains, horsesizes an' all."

Santha Ann groaned. "But Achsy hain't got no planner," she said despairingly. "Nor no organ, nor anything."

"We can buy 'em, Santhy—lot's of 'em; they'll be handy to hev in the family," muttered the farmer, now half asleep.

"And this awful thing!" Santha went on, picking up a hideous if people crowned hat—"the awfulest thing I ever saw, and the coarsest. It's a man's straw hat!"

"Tain't. I got it for Achsy, 'n I got it cheap, too."

This was too much. The woman threw the hat across the floor, stumbled over bundles and boxes and farming implements, and made for the door. She turned round for a final question.

"Did you get something for a suit of clothes?" she asked, her facial muscles contorted.

"I did, Santhy Ann—I did," he answered, solemnly, with a side wave of his right hand. "I got fifty yards. Make 'em loose, Santhy Ann—make 'em loose; there's plenty o' material."

Between crying and urging the woman went out of the room, and sat down in the kitchen, almost ready to despair.

"Well," said the widow, who was still wiping up the last of the dishes, "no one can't say but he's a good provider."

"I'd just like to hear anyone say anything about it!" muttered Santha Ann, indignantly, and the widow meekly subsided.

"Well, I s'pose I must fill the lamps. Thank heaven he did git the tie!" said Santha. "It's a blessed mercy it didn't roll out o' the wagon." And she went slowly out in the hall, where the big five gallon jar stood.

Through the open door she could see that Mart had arisen and was staggering round. He saw her lift the can, and spoke: "You bet your life, Santhy Ann, I had mis'able work keepin' that thing from sploding. I put my foot on it an' held my umbreller over it to keep it out o' the moonshine, an' the cork popped out an' I stuffed it up best I could. Don't you never send me after no kerosene no more."

"I won't send you after anything, if I know myself," snapped his wife, and took up the can.

"My gracious to goodness!" she cried, as she tried to decant some of the fluid into a smaller flask, "what's this!"

"Kinder looks like m'lasses," said the widow.

"Oh, heavens! it is! When will my troubles end!" sobbed Santha Ann. "Five gallons of good sweetening utterly spoiled! I do think that's the straw too much, an' I won't bear it—I won't. I'll send Mart about his bizness. To think! he must 'a ben drugged by some wicked, designin' villen!"

"Oh, well, men 'll do them things," said the widow. "S'pose he went on that way right along?"

"Pd—I'd kill him, I bleeve," muttered Santha, fiercely; then her eye fell on the roll that had done duty as a cork. She looked at it through tear dimmed eyes as she picked it up. It was creased and crumbled and smeared with molasses, but nevertheless she smiled a sickly smile and thrust it into her pocket.

Then she went back into the living room, and found that Mart had fallen asleep on the lounge. She began to investigate again, opening bundle after bundle, some to her satisfaction, others fairly making her blood boil as she afterward intimated to Achsa. There were patent gridirons, coffee pots, broilers, a machine with ponderous wings for keeping off flies, three rat traps of different designs, all patented, boxes of needles, red cotton, and darning implements—things that she never could use. There were over forty yards of satteen, a whole piece of calico, a shawl that would have matched Joseph's coat, which her affectionate spouse had doubtless intended for a present, a pack of cards, a knitting machine, a child's rocking chair, and a small patent foot bedstead. Besides these there were packages of candy, crockery, crackers, cakes, and a dozen or two of canned vegetables.

"What ever will I do!" sighed Santha Ann; "what shall I do?"

"Well, you can sell some of 'em."

Santha Ann looked up—there stood the ubiquitous widow, a broad smile on her face, as she took in the situation.

"No, I won't. I'll keep the hull of 'em, an' if Mart ain't a wiser man after he gits over this spree, I'll know the reason why."

Then she went upstairs.

Achsa stood by the window wiping her eyes; she had been crying.

"Never you mind, dear," said her mother, her kind maternal heart stirred; "don't go to feel bad."

"I don't—but he even thought of my hat," said the girl tearfully.

"No, dear; not the right kind of one, but he——"

"I knew he wouldn't. I'll never trust him again."

"But he did get lots o' useful things, dear."

"Yes; the carpet sweeper and the cradle, and the ice cream churn and the——"

"Well, well, let's make the best on it, Achsy."

"It'll be all over town," sobbed the girl. "Yes, but——"

"And I can't go to church next Sunday, and all the girls with their new hats! I won't wear the old one—I vow I won't."

"You shan't, my dear. We'll go into the city ourselves by the train, you and I."

"That's likely when father's spent all his money and yours too."

"Look here, Achsy!"

Achsa looked. What did she see? A big roll of bank bills which her mother flourished in the air over her head.

"Oh, Achsa! there's a hundred dollars! How he come by 'em I don't know, an' how he kept 'em I can't say; but there they are, an' it almost takes my breath away to think where I found 'em. He had rolled 'em up and put 'em for a cork in the nose of the kerosene can, an' the can was full of molasses." She stopped now to laugh. "If he hasn't been on a canter, then my name ain't Santha Ann. Won't he be ashamed! deacon of the church and all! Oh, we've got him well under! He won't dare to say 'scity' to me for a year to come; no, not till the day of his death. I'm going to put the cradle in my bedroom right afore his eyes, an' the cream freezer, an' lots o' things, an' I'm going to 'propriate that hundred dollars, too. I won't spend it all, though; only make up for the things he didn't git; and I'll buy a carpet too, Achsa, so't he didn't git that sweeper in vain."

"Well, I guess we can go to-day, if we can git ready in an hour. The widow says she'll stay here till we come back, so's to git the dinner. We'll see how our shopping compares with his, an' we won't drink no beverages either. But, Achsy, I s'pect if we weren't the victims, we'd split our sides laughing over the deacon's purchases."

When Mart woke up, about 1 o'clock, he found his dinner ready and his wife and daughter missing. He had a confused idea that he had driven them both from home, and was inconsolable till the widow handed a note from his wife, which ran thus:

"Mart Ingram—You cum hoam beestly drunk this morning at sun-up. Ain't you ashamed an' you a deekon of the church!!!

"Now I hev got to goe in-toun to git things reely needed, an' I've took that hundered dollars you stoped up the kerosine can with. It won't be nie naled if I deant spend every cent of it, thou I deant know how you got it—gambolled for it, perhaps. By the time I come home I hope you will be sober!"

He was. He lived on humble pie for a month, and wore sackcloth and ashes in meekness and repentance for a year. Never once did he ask for the change of his hundred dollars, but he always looked admiratively at the bright figured carpet which adorns the parlor to this day, and which he unwittingly conjured out of the carpet sweeper.

But he never touched wine again, and "beverages" of any description, except tea and coffee, he always afterward declined.—Mary A. Denison in Harper's Bazar.

POINTS FROM A BARBER.

The Difference Between American and German Faces—Barbering by Contract.

A fashionable up town barber of German extraction ventured, with the usual timidity of members of his profession, to give a reporter some facts about the face and the way some people desire to be shaved. He said: "In Germany we can shave more rapidly than in America. The Germans have longer and rounder faces, which permit long swipes with the razor. Their beard, too, is not so stiff as the American's. In the United States small and angular faces prevail, so the razor cannot travel any great length without coming to a turning point. Hence the razor is limited as to its surface capacity as far as one stroke goes. A number of small and indefinite swipes are made with the grain. It is difficult to shave the average American against the grain. His beard is too hard for such a task and his flesh too tender. Once in two years perhaps, a man may request a grain shave. There is no need of a request, though, for I can tell a man who is in the habit of shaving against the grain. His beard sticks out from his face. About twice a year an American astonishes me by asking me to shave him with long strokes. Now I don't like the long strokes, for they are liable to cut the face.

"One of the nuisances in the barber business is the customer who rushes in and swears he has only two minutes to spare to get shaved. I hurry up as rapidly as possible and in my anxiety I manage to cut him in several spots. The would-be hurrying man who has worked me like fire, then coolly stops and chats half an hour with another customer. It is dangerous to be shaved in a hurry. The barber is somewhat excited by the order to shave quickly and is always wondering while at work if he is fast enough.

"We have monthly customers. I make on some and lose on others. For $2.50 I barber a customer one month—that is, give him a shave every day, if he wants it, and one hair cut during the month. Remember, bay rum, pomade, hair oil, vaseline, brilliantine and powder are included. Well, if he took a ten cent shave he wouldn't get bay rum, but he saves all these extras by the wholesale contract. If he shaved every day at a dime it would only be about $3 per month, not counting a hair cut. The reduction then amounts to 75 cents a month. Now, very few men shave every day in a barber shop, and there is where the profit comes for monthly contracts.

"Frequently, though, I have a customer who gets the worth of his $2.50. He comes once a day regular (he gets so only came three times a week), and wants a three days' under the skin shave. I have to daily over his face the same as if he were paying 25 cents a shave. He is more exacting than ever, wants more bay rum, and appears very much afraid he will not get his money's worth. Now, that kind of a customer takes up time, which is more expensive than bay rum. He happens, too, to always be in at the proper moment to keep good customers waiting. The daisy monthly customers drop in three or four times a week, never nothing about regretting he cannot come every day, and requires no extra attention. Yet, if he wanted to, I could make a contract for three or four shaves a week and a hair cut for the sum of $1.50 per month. Still he is not cheated, for if he comes once a day on the $2.50 contract it is all right, he gets his shave. There is no fortune in barbering now. Competition is too great."—New York Mail and Express.

Mrs. Cleveland at Saranac.

Have you received from the president's bride a cardboard with a leaf, cut neatly out of birch bark, pasted in the center, and under that the autographs of herself and husband? You might have got one if you had asked at the right time and place—that is to say, while she was in the Adirondacks. An artist named Leuta from Albany was in the motel, and one day he fashioned a bit of bark into a leaf, pencilling it a little to perfect the semblance. Mrs. Cleveland chanced to see it and her admiration was girlishly emotional. She declared that it was just too lovely for anything at all—except to adorn the page of an autograph album, and to that use she put it.

Somebody had mailed an album to her, begging that she would return it with the president's and her own signatures. She embellished a leaf of the book with the birch leaf, got Mr. Cleveland to write his name and then signed her own. The result pleased her, and she responded to every call with a similar souvenir. I have one before me as I write. It belongs to a friend who was at Saranac a week during the stay of the presidential party. She says that Mrs. Cleveland made not less than a hundred, and that every applicant for an autograph got an example. Lentze did the cutting and tracing, but Mrs. Frankie's own hands completed the jobs, except that the president, being interrupted in a chat or awakened from a doze, wrote his name in nonchalant obedience to her request.—Albany Journal.

Statistics of the Sensational Drama.

Somebody with a passion for statistics has taken the trouble to dissect the sensational dramas of Alphonse d'Ennery, and he reports that they require the cooperation of 18 widows; 16 sons and 2 daughters of persons executed; 80 orphans of the male and 112 of the female sex; 60 blind persons and 10 feigning blindness; 93 defamed virgins, 22 fratricides, 8 patricides, 145 foundlings; 93 lost and 116 kidnapped children; 124 exchanged or foisted; 212 false wills, 210 stolen pocketbooks; 198 duels with swords, 128 with pistols, 2 with sabres, 8 with knives and 10 with axes; 45 fires, 128 murders with weapons and 126 with poison; 49 drownings; 30 guilty and 62 innocent galley convicts, 80 freed and 28 escaped prisoners, 77 adulterers, 64 seducers, 113 burglaries, 206 distraints, 72 lunatics, 62 cretins and 28 feigning lunatics, 116 false marriages and 41 bigamists.—Boston Transcript.

New Waterproof Garment.

The English shower proof cloth has been found wanting, because it allows water to penetrate it if any pressure comes upon it; so that if the wearer take a horse car niter being out in the rain, and be lucky enough to get a seat in it, her dress is dampened. A London firm, noting this, has endeavored to please both the ladies and the Lancet, and has succeeded as far as the latter is concerned, having extracted a kindly notice from it. The new garment is of shower proof cloth, coated with India-rubber placed between it and its lining. On the shoulders the rubber coating is omitted, and thus ventilation is obtained. —Scientific Journal.

On the Rail in Russia.

A trip from Berlin to St. Petersburg takes about thirty-six hours. You start at 9 a. m. by an express train and do not strike the "sleepers" till you reach Wirballen. The Russian conveniencies for night travel are almost perfect. The compartments are large, the beds good, the ventilation is scientific and the motion easy. The springy gait of the carriage rocks you to sleep. The attendants are all alive and do not ask for or seem to expect fees. The train stops often and long enough after daylight to "refresh" the hungriest and thirstiest of mortals. At the tidy looking stations—wooden, one story, painted yellow, each with boxes of flowers in the windows—he finds glasses of delicious coffee or strong tea, "screeching" hot. The latter is served from the "samovar" or big urn, and is on tap night and day. A slice of lemon floating on top makes this cheering drink look like brandy punch. There also may be had the whitest bread, the most golden butter, and dainty Russian dishes, of which I am most happy to recall melons and rice crowned in a brown sauce that would kindle an appetite under the ribs of death.

On the tongue of a polite Russian this language is musical and fluent. We heard its accents first at Wisballen, where the baggage inspection takes place. It is no joke for persons who have been travelling for fifteen hours from Berlin to be waked at midnight and put through a custom house ordeal. As I stepped off the train into the cold and damp of the Wisballen station a pleasant voice saluted my ear with a long sentence, of which I caught only the word "passport." Looking up I saw, by the dim light of a lantern, a Russian officer of gigantic stature. He was most becomingly dressed in a blue tunic, flowing trousers tucked into highly polished boots, an Astrakhan fur cap with a red top and a white pompon; and a long sword trailed from his side to the floor. His large healthy face beamed benevolence. If he had asked for my pocket book I believe I should have given it up to him without hesitation. I handed him Mr. Bayard's valued certificate of my citizenship, with the single word "American." You should have seen the smile on his face stretch into a positive laugh of welcome. —American in St. Petersburg.

Singular Coincidences of "13."

Curious people will be interested in the following strange coincidences in the life of Richard Wagner, in which the number 13 figures extensively enough to satisfy the most superstitious Scotchman of them all. Wagner was born in 1813 and died on the 13th of the month; there are 13 letters in his name, and the sum of the figures in 1813 equals 13. The full date of his death was the 13th day of the second month in '83; it makes 13 twice—viz.: first 13, and again 2+8+3=13. He composed just 13 works. His first and determining impression in favor of a dramatic career was formed on the 13th of the month. He was influenced in his choice emphatically by hearing Weber's "Freischutz," and by Wilhelmine Schroeder Devrient. The latter went upon the stage on the 13th of October, 1819, and the "Freischutz" was completed on May 13, 1820, and first performed in Dresden. Wagner's home, in 1822 (1+8+2+2=13). Weber died in Wagner's 13th year. Wagner's first public appearance as a musical personage dates from the year he entered the Leipsic university as a student of music—1813 (1+8+1+3=13). The stage at Riga, where he became director, was opened on the 13th day of September, 1837, and he there began the composition of "Rienzi," which he completed in Paris in 1840 (1+8+4=13). On the 13th of April, 1842, he completed his "Tannhauser," and it was performed in Paris on March 13, 1861, and on the 13th of August, 1845, he began the first of his "Bairouth" dramas. The 13th of September, 1859, was Wagner's last day at "Bairouth" before leaving for Venice. He saw Liszt for the last time in Venice on January 14, 1883, and he died on the 13th of February, in the 16th year of the new German confederation. There are a few among many other similar coincidences in his life.—John A. Butler in Chicago Times.

Illegal and Unsportsmanlike.

According to Vanity Fair, the Duke of Sutherland, who visited New York a few months ago, appears to have been the innocent victim of an unfortunate occurrence in Norway, while yachting there recently. It appears that during the stay of his yacht Katharina in the port of Molde, and while he himself was away inland, some of his friends on board—ignorant no doubt that they were acting both illegally and, what is worse, in an unsportsmanlike manner—landed on some islands, shot a tame reindeer browsing quietly, and of a token or so of eider fowl (almost sacred for their down, and quite tame), and indulged in salmon netting. The party were very well pleased with their day's sport, and the tame reindeer was hoisted on board with hurrahs and rejoicing. But the next day the sheriff paid a visit to the yacht and invited the whole party to appear before the Norwegian magistrate, who, after due cautioning, inflicted the delicate fine of £100 for trespassing and illegal shooting and fishing, which fine was paid. The Norwegian press acquits the duke of all personal responsibility, throwing the whole blame on his sporting companions.—Boston Transcript.

Chief Draughtsman of the Treasury.

Chief Drummond, of the United States Treasury department, stationed in New York, is a broad shouldered, heavy set man, and wears heavy rimmed spectacles. He has a wonderful jaw and can bite a counterfeit coin in two, from a dollar to five cent piece. No matter when or where he is, he invariably bites a spurious coin in two when he sees it. He bit a dime for a street car conductor not long ago, and the latter wanted to jump on him. The plucky chief made the conductor show every coin he had. A passenger declared it was an outrage and told the chief that he frequently passed counterfeit money. When the detective calmly opened his coat and showed his badge, a self confessed shover of the queer immediately left the car.—New York Mail and Express.

The Weather Prophet's Wife.

The Observer yesterday met a Canadian newspaper man who happens to be well acquainted with "Prof." E. Stone Wiggins. "What is the fellow—honest crank or malicious humbug?" inquired the Observer. "A little of both, perhaps," returned my acquaintance. "He is an amateur and shallow astronomer with a sort of mania for running afoul of every authority from Sir Isaac Newton to Richard Proctor. Still, I doubt if he would ever have been much heard of or noticed but for his wife. She is the clever member of the firm, and knows the money value of notoriety even when she has by the nose a great sort of charlatanism. She is the guid- and mentor of E. Stone Wiggins.—New York Graphic.

WEEKLY GAZETTE

THURSDAY.....MAY 5, 1887.

SUBSCRIPTION, per year, $2.

A NEW DEPARTURE.

The GAZETTE this week takes a departure from its long-time custom, which has been contemplated for some time. Its readers will hereafter receive their favorite paper on Thursday of each week, instead of on Saturday. Our large circulation and imperfect press facilities has prevented us for some time from getting the paper to patrons in outside towns before Saturday evening or Sunday, and as postoffices are closed on the Sabbath it frequently happened that patrons could not get their paper until Monday. Complaints of this kind have been so frequent lately that we have determined to do what we can to remedy the matter.

We are now negotiating for a power press, and when we get one to suit us the GAZETTE will be enlarged and otherwise improved. We are determined to fully deserve a continuance of the liberal patronage which we have received during the past sixteen years, and to make the pioneer paper of Los Angeles county one worthy of Anaheim.

KILLED BY MISTAKE.

Amateur detectives, especially when spurred on by hope of reward, are apt to commit very serious mistakes. Sometimes these mistakes are ludicrous enough, but the faux pas made by the Carver Brothers is apt to cool their zeal and perhaps cool their heels in a prison cell. The Carvers live in the mountains in Kern county, and they conceived that a stranger who recently went to live in that vicinity was Pete Olsen, the man who murdered his employer's wife some months ago. They determined to earn the reward offered for the murderer's capture, and on last Saturday they visited their neighbor and found him chopping a tree. They told him they had come to arrest him, when he uttered an exclamation and swung his axe about his head, as if to throw it at the brothers, who averred that he also had "a most ferocious expression on his face." The amateurs doubtless thought so under the circumstances, and in their nervous fear they fired at him, killing him instantly. And now it transpires that their victim is not Olsen, but a man named Seibert who resembled the murderer. It is a "pretty rough deal" to be shot to death for Olsen, or jailed for Springer, because of an unfortunate resemblance to those worthies, and it is time that a halt was called in that sort of thing. The regular officers of the law are the proper persons to make arrests, and their training prevents them from being so scared by a ferocious expression of countenance, as to shoot the wearer to death and have him identified as the wrong man afterwards.

A SUIT OF INTEREST.

An action has been brought in one of the Superior Courts of San Francisco, the result of which will be watched with interest. Our glorious Constitution says, among a multitude of many other good things, that individuals loaning money on a mortgage must pay the tax upon that mortgage, and that all agreements in contravention of that provision are void. But it has happened very frequently that the mortgagor pays his indebtedness to the mortgagee at a date subsequent to the first Monday in March. The mortgagee is assessed for his interest in the property mortgaged, however, but having received his money he refuses to pay the tax, and the mortgagor is forced to pay it to avoid a cloud upon his title to the premises. This has given rise to innumerable bickerings, but the amount involved is generally so small that until the present instance the courts have not been appealed to by the victims. The case referred to is this: On the 2d of March 1882, William Wolf mortgaged property on the corner of Sixth and Howard streets, San Francisco, to Morris Neudel and M. P. Neudel for $46,500 at 1 per cent per month for three years. On March 2, 1885, he paid $4,500 on the mortgage. The City Assessor assessed the mortgage debt to the Neudels, valuing the same at $23,550, the tax being $391 14, which the Neudels refused to pay. On March 2, 1885, Wolf mortgaged the property to the Hibernia Savings and Loan Society for $24,000, and on the 24th of March the society bought in the property at a delinquent tax sale on account of said mortgage tax. Wolf has brought suit to recover $411 20 from the Neudels under the law requiring the holder of a mortgage to pay the mortgage tax.

It is said that the Sheriff of San Bernardino county has abandoned the theory that Springer murdered his wife at the hotel in Colton, and is now working on the hypothesis that Springer and his wife were both killed for the money in their possession. It is argued that the husband could have gotten the money in an easier and safer way than through the wife's murder. Springer's body is by some believed to have been hidden in the bed of the Santa Ana, while others think he never came to Colton at all, but was killed and his body thrown overboard at Wilmington by his wife and a man closely resembling Springer.

It's a very dull week when there is no strike among wageworkers at Chicago. The latest is the hod carriers, who to the number of 3000 struck for an advance of five cents per hour. It is probably true that few of the strikes accomplish the object aimed at, but it is also undeniably true that they serve a good purpose in checking the aggressions of capital. Employers and capitalists are prone to become arrogant and unjust whenever they have full power, and the frequent strikes are reminders that there is a limit to human patience under purse-proud aggressiveness.

CURIOUS PROFESSIONAL ETHICS

One of the most curious phases of the late, and lamented, smallpox scare, comes from the lovely little city of San Diego—which, by the way, is situated about one hundred miles south of Anaheim, on the line of the California Central R. R. It may be remarked, as a preface, that the resident of San Diego is intensely loyal to his town. That is a feature which was characteristic of the inhabitants even at a time when a cemetery was a howling Donnybrook Fair in comparison to the dull village by the sea; and from the incident we are about to relate it seems that this devotion has intensified with the growth and prosperity of the place.

During the alleged smallpox epidemic in Los Angeles, and when the possessor of the most innocent pimple was viewed with the most profound distrust, Flora Morton, a servant in a San Diego hotel, was suddenly taken ill. The physician who was called evidently saw the serious nature of the disease, and he summoned a number of other physicians to see the unfortunate girl. They went into her room, locked the door, even against her father, and though the girl called loudly for him he was not permitted to see her until she was dead. The remains were buried with great haste, the physicians were dumb to all inquiries, and as a result of their peculiar tactics it became noised abroad that the girl had died of smallpox. As a result the hotel was vacated, much to the loss of the Boniface. Another rumor soon gained credence, however, to the effect that the girl died in childbirth, and when questioned the attending physicians admitted that they had used instruments upon her. As a sequel to the much-mixed matter the hotel-keeper instituted a suit for damages against Dr. Magee the Health Officer, for giving the public indirectly to believe that the girl died of smallpox, thereby driving away his patronage, when in fact the girl died in giving birth to a child. Under the pressure of this suit, the physicians now say unqualifiedly that the girl did die of malignant smallpox, and in justification of the hasty burial, the secrecy and mystery with which they enshrouded the case, they allege that any other course would have precipitated a panic disastrous to the interests of San Diego; and they "point with pride" to the fact that their precautions prevented the spread of the disease. They admit, also, that they used instruments upon the girl, because there were symptoms which led them to believe that she was enciente, but they now declare that the girl was chaste. They further assert that they never denied that the girl died of smallpox, but always evaded the question.

It must be admitted that a considerable toughness of conscience is requisite to permit the good name and memory of an innocent girl to be traduced upon the streets and through the press, to the end that the business interests of the real estate men of the booming city should not be injured. It adds nothing to the credit of the physicians, also, that the truth was only wrung from them when one of their number was about to be mulcted for damages for his share in the transaction.

THE canneries are getting ready for the summer campaign, and in two or three weeks a number of them will be in operation. The canners say that the fruit crop of this season will be very large and they profess to believe they will have no difficulty in procuring all the good fruit they want at low prices. Of course, it is to their interest to talk in that way, yet it is probably a fact that the fruit crop of this season will be larger than that of last year. The pack will, it is estimated, be about 33 per cent larger than last year, and will amount to about 800,000 cases.

An Important Case Decided.

The United States Supreme Court has decided the case of Alfred Robinson, plaintiff in error, against John Anderson and others. The action in this case is ejectment to recover a large tract of land, a portion of the Rancho Las Bolsas, in this county, and $30,000 damages for detention of the same. The land is alleged to be of great value, and the rents and profits to be of the value of $1000 per month. The court affirms the decision of the Circuit Court of California, with costs.

The GAZETTE is informed by R. J. Northam, agent for Alfred Robinson, Trustee, that the decision of the Circuit Court was in favor of Robinson and against the settlers, and it is this decision that has been affirmed. The title to the land is, we believe, not now in Robinson, but in William D. Harrison and others, to whom Robinson conveyed his title during the pendency of the action.

Extracting Orange Seeds.

Timothy Carroll has several men at work on the vacant lot beyond the depot peeling oranges and extracting the seeds therefrom. He gathers the fruit which has fallen to the ground from the trees, and which is not fit for packing or shipping, from many of the orchards around town. The scarcity of orange trees this year has impelled Mr. Carroll to gather a large supply of seeds, which he will plant next season, and when the seedling trees are one or two years old, they will be budded to choice varieties of oranges, such as the Washington Navels and Malta Bloods.

County Officers Salaries.

Below is given the salaries allowed the Los Angeles county officers: County Clerk, $9600 per annum; Sheriff, $12,000; Recorder, $9000; Auditor, $3000; Treasurer, $3000; Assessor, $9000; District Attorney, $3600; Supervisors $5 per day, while in session and mileage.

This act was approved March 17th.

Off in the Chilly Night.

OAKLAND, April 24.—In the divorce suit of Mary against J. P. Condon, the latter charges his wife with inhuman conduct, calling him bad names, and says that one chilly night in March his wife came to his room and took all the bedclothes off the bed and locked them in the closets, and compelled him to sleep without any. His wife drinks two five-gallon kegs of beer per week, and she has been arrested for keeping a disorderly house. She took advantage of his temporary retirement in jail to remove the community property to San Francisco.

COUNTY NEWS.

The U. S. Circuit Court, with Judge E. M. Ross presiding, is in session at Los Angeles.

A marriage license has been issued permitting Everett B. Trefethen to wed Hattie N. Beckett. The parties live at Westminster.

Los Angeles is somewhat of a city. During April 312 arrests for criminal offenses were made by the police, and there were 297 convictions.

The portraits of ex-Judge Brunson and Judge Cheney now decorate the Superior Court room. They were presented to the county by members of the bar.

The Times is in tepid water. H. H. Boyce has begun three suits for libel against that paper, asking $50,000 in each instance. The libels consist in the Times charging Boyce with being a swindler, trickster and bad man generally.

Following the consolidation of the local railroad companies, various changes in officials have been announced. J. F. Goddard is promoted to the position of General Manager of the A. T. and S. F. road and all its branches. W. F. White is promoted to the position of Traffic Manager. A number of other minor changes have been made.

About 3 o'clock Saturday afternoon J. L. Duval, lately from New York, was driving along in a buggy on his way from the Azusa to his home at Monrovia. When near the latter place the wheel of the buggy struck a stone in the road and the heavy jolt caused a shotgun which Mr. Duval had in the buggy with him to be discharged. The load passed through the young man's heart, killing him instantly.

In Los Angeles on Monday afternoon Mrs. James Baird, of 539 Chavez street, was seriously and perhaps fatally burned, and the infant child of Mrs. Erhard was killed. Mrs. Baird was carrying the child in her arms, and in working about the stove upset a coaloil can which was on a shelf above the stove. The can fell on the stove and exploded and the burning oil set fire to Mrs. Baird's clothes, with the result stated.

In Los Angeles on Monday evening about 8:30 a fire started in the furniture warehouse of Walton & Wachtel on Third street. The warehouse and the hotel called the Ashley House were burned to the ground. The Congregational Church and several adjoining buildings were badly scorched. The Ashley House was a new structure and cost $12,000. It was owned by J. B. Lankershim. The stock in the furniture store was valued at $20,000.

Judge Hutton has rendered a decision in a water case in which Pasadena was the scene of the controversy. The Directors of the Pasadena and Lake Vineyard Land and Water Co. proposed to transfer their property and consolidate with the Arroyo Seco Water Co., and the stockholders of the first-named company asked for an injunction to prevent the transfer. The injunction was temporarily granted, and upon the hearing Judge Hutton holds that the several motions of the defendants—first, to dissolve the injunction; second, to modify the injunction; third, to increase the amount of the undertaking, be denied.

It is said by the Times that a railroad is to be built from Shorb's station, in the San Gabriel Valley, to Los Alamitos beach, via Downey and the tract purchased by the California Co-operative Colony; thence probably east of Signal Hill, the site purchased for the projected new hotel, and along the mesa of the Alamitos to Alamitos Beach and to Long Beach, connecting there with the Long Beach Railroad to San Pedro, and possibly a junction with the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe from Anaheim; which latter road has already secured the right of way to Long Beach, through the south half of the Alamitos; thence to Rattlesnake Island at San Pedro.

The Garden of—Anaheim.

Mr. Beau De Zart, of the Los Angeles Weekly Directory, was in Anaheim last week, and records his impressions in the following paragraph:

Anaheim has been asleep for some years, but is commencing to wake up and shake off the dust. They are awakening to the fact that while land is selling all around them at big prices and new towns are springing up everywhere, their land is not on the market at all hardly. It is a fact that the finest land in the country can be bought in Anaheim from 50 to 100 per cent. cheaper than anywhere else in Los Angeles county. The secret is mainly this: The Anaheim people are nearly all pretty well to do, and while the country around has been booming they have placidly laid back and contented themselves with the reflection that they could afford to wait. Land is not cut up into 10 and 20-acre lots here as elsewhere. The land is just as productive, as well watered as any other district, but still it is lower in price. There is now lying in and around Anaheim over 1000 carloads of wine—getting age, I suppose. The town wears a quiet, well-to-do appearance; the stores are well stocked, the streets well watered, the hotels well patronized, yet there is no hurry, no bustle; but that will all disappear this summer and fall with the advent of the irrepressible real estate agent. Anaheim is going to have the biggest boom of all, if it is one of the last. The population is between 1500 and 1600, and the principal industry is the manufacture of wines. The appearance of the surrounding country is about the same as around Santa Ana and Orange—a very garden.

—The meeting of the stockholders of the water company on last Saturday was attended by a majority of stockholders, but the necessary two-thirds of the stock issued not being represented, no definite action was taken upon the proposed amendments to the by-laws. They were discussed, however, and a motion was adopted directing the Secretary to write out the amendments separately, and have the same circulated among the stockholders and endeavor to get the written assent of two-thirds of the stock issued to the adoption of the by-laws. The Wright Irrigation Bill was also discussed, and a motion that it is the sense of the stockholders that the Directors be instructed to furnish the bonds required by the bill, and that a petition be prepared asking the Supervisors to order an election under the bill, was made, seconded and adopted.

—The pleasing operation of removing a two-pound tumor from a man's back was made yesterday by Dr. Ballard. The man endured the operation stoically and without using opiates, but a friend of his whom he brought along to cheer him up, reeled over in a dead faint at the first incision of the surgeon's knife, and lay unconscious on the floor of the Doctor's office until the operation was over and the Doctor could administer restoratives.

—The sale of the Shanklin ranch has not yet been consummated, but the transaction will probably be closed in a few days. W. H. Bailey, the probable purchaser, is a man of wealth and energy who will work a transformation on the place. In his career as the proprietor of a sugar plantation in the Sandwich Islands for the past twenty years, he has had much experience with irrigation problems, which will serve him in good stead in his new acquisition.

The Webster Family Concert Company, just arrived from Cortland, N. Y., will perform at Kroeger's Hall on next Monday and Tuesday evenings, the 9th and 10th inst. Entire change of programme each performance. Reserved seats without extra charge at Helmsen's. Admission, 25 and 50 cents.

TO THE FORE.

Old Anaheim Gets a Late but Generous Recognition.

The leaven is beginning to work; Anaheim is beginning to take its place among the localities which seem to investors as a likely place to yield large profits for any money invested therein. Ex-School Superintendent Hinton, now of Hinton, Day & Mathes, a real-estate firm recently organized, but doing a large business in the city, says that the firm have had during the past two weeks more inquiries for land in Anaheim than they ever had previously, and he predicts that there will shortly be a boom here that will "astonish the natives." We have great respect for the opinions of the Los Angeles real-estate agent. They can make and unmake any place, and their praise or censure fixes the fate of the object of their attention. That the shade under which Anaheim has been partially enveloped for some years is due to the antipathy of the fraternity alluded to is a statement which no quibbling can gainsay. The stranger who sought information in the real estate offices of Los Angeles concerning Anaheim, usually got such a nauseous dose that he avoided Anaheim and imbibed a deep-rooted prejudice against it, without having been nearer the town than 30 miles. Viewed from one standpoint, this conduct of the real-estate man was not as reprehensible as at first would seem. They had no interests in Anaheim, and couldn't acquire any. No land was for sale; and by that we mean that nothing but scattered small pieces of land were on the market. But in almost every other part of the county there were hundreds and thousands of acres which the agents had upon their books, and which it was to their interest to sell to inquirers; hence, when a probable purchaser, who, having heard of Anaheim, sought their disinterested advice, they got it in the way indicated. And you, gentle reader, wouldn't you have talked in the same way under the same circumstances?

But a change has come over the spirit of their dream. Their books have now descriptions of Anaheim property which, if they sell, means large commissions to them. Their voices are uplifted in praise (and truthful praise) of old Anaheim, and in due time, as predicted by the gentleman referred to, Anaheim will soon be far up towards first place in the race of progress. It cannot be otherwise when we see one syndicate of real-estate men investing over $60,000 in the town, another real-estate man—G. W. Burton—investing $20,000, as he did last week, and yet others endeavoring daily to secure control of eligible property.

Town Trustees.

The newly elected Board of Town Trustees met on Monday and organized by electing Adolph Rimpau President of the Board. F. A. Korn, member-elect, refused to qualify and the Board signified its intention of filling the vacancy at its regular meeting yesterday.

The Board met in regular session yesterday. Present, Messrs. Rimpau, Schindler, Cahen and Kroeger, and Clerk Nebelung.

Application of A. T. Wallop to extend the water pipe to his house on Philadelphia street. Referred to Committee on Public Improvements.

Application of J. D. Smith for permission to peddle meat within the town limits under his license as proprietor of a meat market. Referred to Town Attorney for his opinion.

Mr. J. Backs was elected a member of the Board, vice Mr. Korn.

The following permanent Committees were appointed:

Financial—Cahen, Backs and Rimpau. Public Improvements—Schindler, Kroeger and Cahen. Ordinance—Kroeger, Schindler and Backs. Special—Backs, Rimpau and Kroeger.

There having been some informality in the proceedings affecting the opening of Broadway, the petition for the opening of the street was again read and the necessary proceedings were ordered to comply with the law on the subject.

The Concert.

The farewell benefit concert given to Miss Nellie Bancroft on last Friday evening was a success, artistically and otherwise, and was an evidence of the esteem in which the lady is held. Where all the performers were of such unusual excellence, it would be invidious to particularize. Suffice it to say that the entertainment was one of great pleasure to lovers of music, and they testified their appreciation by repeated encores. The beneficiary was overwhelmed with floral gifts of beautiful and appropriate design.

Miss Bancroft will soon leave for Boston to continue and perfect her musical studies. The best wishes and hopes for her success follow her from the hundreds of warm friends she has in Anaheim.

A CARD.

Ed. Gazette.—Permit me through your columns to thank those ladies and gentlemen who projected the farewell concert given to me on last Friday evening, and those who assisted in making it such a success. I am very grateful to them, and wish it was in my power to show them how much I appreciate their kindness.

My thanks are also due to the public of Anaheim for their warm heartedness on this and many other occasions. The memory of their friendship will remain with me wherever I may be. Nellie Bancroft.

—It is said that the S. P. is going to adopt a very low rate for fares between local points—that, in fact, they are going to cut rates to a very low notch. The public will exclaim, "Cut, and come again!" It is an affliction which will provoke no outcry.

Since the above was placed in type, we learn that the company has made a pleasing reduction in local rates of fare. Round trip tickets from Anaheim to Los Angeles and return, good for thirty days, can now be procured for $1 60. A family commutation ticket, good for six months, costs $20 00.

IMPROVE OUR WATER SYSTEM.

A Vigorous and Timely Plea, Containing Many Sound Thoughts.

Ed. Gazette:—With my usual modesty, I have hesitated to put myself into print upon the water question; but it seems as if something was needed and needed soon to remedy our circumstances and better the management. When the companies consolidated it was supposed that that would be a remedy for all difficulties, but nearly four years have rolled by since consolidation, the expenses have not decreased, the debt has not been materially lessened, while the credit of the company is good we cannot borrow a large amount at a low rate, hence expenses, interest and occasionally a loan is demanded on call that always keeps us in straightened circumstances; but little water is being sold, $30 worth or thereabouts during April, while there is abundance in the river.

We have to pay about $15,000 debts during the next six months.

The big flume across the Yorba flat, about a mile long and which cost $5000, is so far decayed that it will not answer its purpose another season. I believe it will be folly to replace it with another such flume, so something must be done and done soon.

Shall we continue to borrow from one man to pay another? Shall we expend thousands of dollars in temporary work that will last but a few years? I believe the time has come for vigorous action and permanent work. We have more water than we use. We cannot sell one-sixth of our water, yet there are a few who are afraid they may dry out eight or ten years hence. Shall we build the proposed new ditch down along the hills to the Kraemer reservoir and then from the reservoir lay a pipe across the sandwash to Anaheim? If so, where is the money to come from? as that alone will cost $30,000 in addition to $15,000 debts we owe, that have to be paid, making $45,000 to be raised this year—about $6 50 a share. Are we ready and willing to stand such an assessment?

I wish to offer my plan for the thoughts and criticisms of the stockholders, hoping that out of such a multitude of counselors we may arrive at plenty of wisdom and if any better plan than mine can be arrived at, I shall be ready to use my influence to its utmost to further it.

Organize our present territory or water district, including the Bixbys and the Yorbas; also straighten our lines to take in a few other small tracts into a water district under the Wright bill; borrow money for 20 years at 6 per cent; pay off our present indebtedness, and expend about $60,000 in permanent improvements, something after the following manner: Put the upper ditch in good or first-class condition, cementing wherever leaks or great seepage occurs and straighten and widen where necessary. Immediately put the Kraemer reservoir in good condition by building a strong embankment and cement the bottom; lay a pipe across to Anaheim; cement one ditch along the hills by ostrich ranch to Bres canyon road and lay pipes south from that ditch every mile or half mile, as may be necessary, and stop this everlasting cleaning of ditches; also pipe the water through Anaheim and by saving the water that is now lost we can irrigate 20,000 acres better than we do now 7,000 acres. This may require more than $60,000, but let us lay down some plan of action and work to it. We can do away with several flumes, and have but one ditch to maintain instead of three or four.

The Superintendent of ditches says that he can run all the water that was used last year, or will be this, and fill our large reservoir four times a year from the Cajon ditch. If so, what is the use of building any more ditches to take care of? Some one will answer, "to carry down plenty of winter water." If you will only call to mind when there is plenty of winter water, no one wants it. All our ditches were dry the last three years, because it was not wanted, and when there is but little water one ditch can carry it. Under the Wright bill we would be compelled to carry it full to reservoir during the winter.

I would like to have this matter discussed, as it is of great importance to all of us, and if there is any better plan let us hear it and adopt it. W. M. McFadden.

The hot weather of the week suggests thoughts of seashore or mountain shade. The landlord of ye summer resort begins to grin.

Mr. Schmidt, who recently conducted a barber shop in Anaheim, has bought the tonsorial establishment of A. Forster in Santa Ana. He family moved thither on Monday.

There are several more marriages on the programme in Anaheim. One will be celebrated in June, and it is said that the others will take place shortly.

J. C. Mauerhan has been given the privilege by the owners to plant corn and grain on some of the lots on the Center tract if he will keep them free from weeds.

Japanese plums are ripe, and the trees are loaded with fruit. Plums of a small variety are maturing, which shows that this fruit is ahead of the cherries this season.

The residence recently vacated by Mr. Schmidt, owned by Mrs. A. Langenberger, is receiving a neat coat of paint, under the supervision of Mr. Boege. The roof is also being painted.

Bishop Bowman, D. D., of Allentown, Penn., will preach in the German language next Thursday evening at 7:30 P. M., in the German Evangelical Church. Germans are cordially invited.

Quite a number of Anaheim families attended the picnic in the Santiago Canyon on Monday. A large crowd was present on the grounds from all parts of the valley, and the day was spent most enjoyably.

A picnic was held at the Landing on Monday by the Westminster and Garden Grove people. They had a pleasant time at the seaside, that resort being much nearer to their section than the canyon.

Bees are swarming in large numbers, and have taken possession of the cornices and eaves of houses. Some boys have captured several swarms, and as a result of their fight with the bees they now carry around swollen optics of a purple hue.

Dan. Morris has sold his house on the Center tract, and will leave Anaheim on account of the ill-health of his wife. As he has received a large share of patronage in the laundry business, we hope that industry will not be discontinued.

There is said to be a constantly increasing advance in the price of wine. This is pleasing to all of our wine-makers, as the majority of them have most of their wine made in the last two or three years still stored in the cellars.

The late rains have caused the weeds to sprout profusely on the new streets through the Center tract, and are two feet high in some parts. Charles Norman has been engaged to mow down the weeds with a mowing machine.

The advertisement of the Planters' Hotel is in another column. As we have heretofore said, Mr. Mason is a born hotel-keeper, and happy is the man who is his guest. We bespeak for Mr. Mason the patronage of the public and the friendship of the people of Anaheim, among whom he proposes to stay.

Mr. Harper of Garden Grove sustained a severe and painful gash on the leg last week. A hay knife was lying on the ground and he accidentally fell against it with his leg. He has been confined to the house, as it has swollen very badly, and is obliged to keep it in one position continually. Unless inflammation sets in, the member will heal with careful nursing.

Good horses being scarce and in demand, L. Wickersham, whose stables are at the corner of Alisо and San Fernando street, Los Angeles, has imported a magnificent lot of horses, to which he calls attention in our advertising columns. We have the word of H. L. Paty, who has inspected the horses, that they are all that Mr. Wickersham claims for them.

Two employes of the railroad company came down from the canyon some days ago, having been paid off, and proceeded to get on a "bender." While in this condition, a man happened to come along, who, it is thought, had watched their actions, knowing that one of them had money. He induced this one to accompany him to a stated point, with the result that he robbed his drunken victim of $18 50. A warrant was issued for his arrest, but so far as yet he has not been captured.

On last Sunday morning a German laborer, who worked in Lewis & Waffle's stable some time ago, went out hunting in North Anaheim with W. M. McFadden's boys. While loading or unloading his gun, he took out his jack knife and hammered the shell, which would not move readily, the result being that the weapon was discharged and the burning powder blown in his face and eyes, and a portion of the charge of shot took off his little finger and seriously lacerated the right hand, while the rest is said to have entered one of the horses.

A crowd of about fifty men and boys assembled at the residence of R. Boettcher on Sunday night to serenade him and his newly wedded wife. The music was commenced by the firing of pistols, with an accompaniment of tin cans, fish-horns and bells, after which they were requested to come in and partake of the good things (also beer and wine) of which Boettcher had laid in a bountiful supply. Singing and joking was indulged in, and at a late hour the merry party took their departure, wishing Mr. and Mrs. Boettcher a long and happy life. We are requested to say that the couple got the best charivari given in Anaheim in several years.

Some weeks ago a man came to C. C. Miller's place, and stated that he had been sent there by some of his (Miller's) friends in Tuolumne county. Thinking that the individual was upright and honest, he allowed him to remain at his place and engage in work. One fine morning the proprietor arose and went out, and seeing a rabbit in the field proceeded to the house to get his gun, but when he entered the gun, ammunition, hunting bag and some blankets were gone, together with the man, who had just fifteen minutes before decamped with the articles. Mr. Miller notified the officers, and went to Santa Ana and Orange to seek information concerning his whereabouts, but nothing has since been seen of the individual or the articles he stole.

The Anaheim Evergreen Nursery.

At the above nursery this season is to be found a larger, better and healthier lot of trees than ever before, which is saying a great deal. Among the trees on hand are Trailing Orange Trees, Northern Fruit Trees, Ornamental Trees, Cypress, Blue Gum and Pepper, all of which will be sold in lots of from 1 to 10,000, at prices which defy competition. No scale; no disease. This will be guaranteed. An inspection of the stock is invited. Timothy Carroll, Near Anaheim Railroad Depot.

MATRIMONY IN FRANCE.

[Paris cor. N. Y. Sun.

Miss Leal, a dashing and elegant brunette, of English or American origin and mysterious antecedents, has just been condemned by the Paris tribunal to four months imprisonment for obtaining money under false pretenses. The story proves the everlasting gullibility of humanity, and throws a light on a curious feature of modern European life, the matrimonial agency. Mme. Demortier, alias Baronne de la Rochette, together with her partner and lover, Lecourtois, kept a matrimonial agency in a handsome suite of rooms in the Boulevard St. Germain. As luck would have it, Miss Leal, in search of adventures, came to this agency one day, and her beauty and talent immediately won her the confidence of the managers of the agency and an offer of partnership, which she accepted. Miss Leal seems to have had considerable experience in the business, for the agency in question was transformed as soon as she became interested. Servants in livery were hired, and advertisements, inserted in Figaro and Le Petit Journal, announcing widows with one million, orphans with "two millions and no scruples," orphans with "three millions and insignificant blemish," who were all anxious to marry husbands of "gentlemanly appearance." Silly men who answered these advertisements received by post a circular surmounted by the Baroness' coronet and motto "Fais ce que dois," or in other words, "Do your duty." The circular ran as follows:

"Marriage is an incontestable necessity, and yet many persons, men and women, are deprived of its blessings for want of relations. The great difficulties experienced in making good matches and happy and rich marriages are due in a large measure to the absence of serious intermediaries. This establishment is not an agency, inasmuch as everything is done en famille. A commission of two per cent is taken on the dowry, payable by the husband after the marriage, and after he has received the sum. The utmost discretion is guaranteed both before and after."

The trick was to throw dust in the eyes of dupes by a certain number of preliminary formalities and questions before presenting them to the rich widow or orphan and to her parents. Venerable old women were hired to act the role of mother; the lover of the Baroness played the part of father or uncle; the widow, the millionaire orphan, or the orphan with "three millions and an insignificant blemish," was impersonated by Miss Leal, who extorted presents from innumerable suitors, took the Baroness and all her pseudo relatives to the opera at the expense of an endless series of simpletons, and who during the past three years has lived luxuriously, and finally set up an agency on her own account in the Rue Washington. The trial was highly amusing, thanks to the testimony of a score of dupes of all ranks, ages and professions, from Barons down to country barbers, who had all paid a tribute of hundreds or of thousands of francs to Miss Leal, always in the hope of winning her and her imaginary dowry, which was never represented at less than $100,000.

The agency of the Baronne de la Rochette and that of Miss Leal were swindling affairs. There are at the present moment in Paris between fifty and sixty serious matrimonial agencies having ramifications in all spheres of society. Furthermore, twenty five per cent of the marriages in the middle and upper classes of Paris are arranged by these agencies. This is a fact which has been established by careful inquiry. Now, let us see how the agency is organized, and how the machinery works.

Anatole desires to marry. He does not know a girl that will suit him; his friends cannot help him; the usages of Parisian life prevent him from making acquaintances among marriageable maidens. He therefore goes to an agency and says, we will suppose, to the manager:

"Monsieur, I am thirty four years of age; I am an employe in the Bilateral Paper Company; I earn $50 a month, but hope to get an increase next year. Can you find me a nice young wife, pretty, bright and an orphan? I do not care to have a mother-in-law, and I don't mind if the young lady is not a musician."

The matrimonial agent looks over his books, reflects and replies:

"Monsieur, I think I can just fix you. Lady, 29 years of age, agreeable exterior, small house near Dijon, expectations $8,000, daughter of a retired military man, excellent pianiste."

Anatole accepts at once, and two months later he is married and happy, and his innocent wife, who knows nothing about the intervention of the discreet agency, exclaims in a moment of expansion: "My Anatole, what a lucky idea that you stopped at Dijon on your way to Geneva! Had it not been for that we might never have met!"

Now comes the question, How did the matrimonial agent know that this modest and honorable spinster was waiting for a husband on the outskirts of Dijon? The answer is, because he has correspondents all over France, who send him information and exercise a sort of secret police on his account. In the provinces, everybody knows everything about everybody else, and it is easy for the correspondents of the matrimonial agents to note that Mlle. A. has inherited $20,000, that Mlle. B. has a weakness for lawyers, and that Mlle. C. has refused to take the vail. "Very good," you will say. "Now tell me how the matrimonial agent manages to bring the young people together." This is precisely the point where genius comes into play, aided often by an obliging priest. The matrimonial agent has under his command a whole army of secondary agents, who may be classified under seven headings—viz: scouts, entertainers having homes, permanent or temporary inquiry agents, travelers, followers, introducers and conscious or unconscious intermediaries. The chief scout of a first-class Parisian matrimonial agency was formerly a body servant of Cavour; he married the chambermaid of a fashionable beauty of the court of Napoleon III; and now he and his wife earn in their new profession $2,000. Their business is to discover marriageable girls and report them at headquarters; the ex-valet of Cavour gossips at cafes with men servants in rich families; he learns the modus vivendi of each family; he gets the names of all the friends of a family; and, if necessary, the names of the friends of the friends. Thanks to this information, the chief matrimonial agent is able to discover among these names either that of a person affiliated with the agency, or else an unconscious agent who will introduce his client to the family of the young lady whose hand and dowry are to be won.

Travelers are agents sent to the provinces, and especially to the seaside or to watering places, on some special mission. Followers are volunteer agents who go to marriages and midday masses in the Paris churches, remark young girls accompanied by their mothers, follow them to their homes, and by dint of patience discover who they are, what they are worth, and so constitute a sort of dossier or brief which they sell to an agency. Conscious intermediaries are financial agents, solicitors or notaries whose business enables them to collect information of a private kind. As for the unconscious agents, they are created by the conscious intermediary, who calls upon a friend of the family about which information is required, or upon a doctor or a priest who is in relations with that family. This conscious intermediary has an honorable social position. He apologizes for intruding, and says that he has been sent to ask for information in view of a marriage much desired by a person whom he is not at liberty to name. The family is puzzled, wonders who the mysterious person may be and answers vaguely, perhaps, but sufficiently to enable the agency to know what are the desires of the family. Then, if the agency has not on its books a client capable of realizing those desires, it is but a poor agency.

The bride rarely knows that she has been won through the intermediary of an agency. It is only the very richly dowered who are aware of the existence of this complicated and mysterious machinery, and who are therefore tempted to see in every young man with whom they waltz a client of a matrimonial agency which is seeking to earn its usual commission of twelve per cent on the dowry. Thanks to the extension of the operations of matrimonial agencies, French marriages in the middle and upper classes tend more and more to become merely operations of loveless arithmetical multiplication.

Brace Up.

You are feeling depressed; your appetite is poor; you are bothered with headache; you are tidgetty, nervous and generally out of sorts, and want to brace up. Brace up, but not with stimulants, spring medicines or bitters, which have for their basis very cheap, bad whisky, and which stimulate you for an hour, and then leave you in worse condition than before. What you want is an alterative that will purify your blood, start healthy action of liver and kidneys, restore your vitality, and give renewed health and strength. Such a medicine you will find in Electric Bitters, and only 50 cents a bottle at A. Krug's drug store.

Getting Even.

The Chicago News has revised its schedule for railway puffery, and announces it as follows:

1.—For the setting forth of the virtues (actual or alleged) of presidents, general managers or directors, $2 per line for first insertion and $1 for each subsequent insertion.

2.—For puffs expressed in choice English, with occasional French phrases or poetical extracts (the whole with a palpable motive of honest enthusiasm) $2.50 per line; 50 per cent. reduction on each subsequent insertion.

3.—General passenger agents and division superintendents will be accorded half rates on the terms offered in Rule No. 1. But in all cases where the title of colonel is used regular first class rates will be demanded.

4.—Thousand-mile tickets on the basis of two cents per mile will be received in exchange for advertising done at our card rates, but these tickets must hold good on passenger as well as on freight trains.

5.—No deviation from the card rates can be made in favor of parties handing us five cent cigars with the puffs they desire published.

6.—For complimentary notices of the wives and children of railroad officials we demand $1.50 per line. We have on hand, ready for immediate use, a splendid assortment of this literature.

7.—Poetry will be made to order at $3 per inch, agate measure. We are prepared to supply a fine line of beptameter puffs, also a limited number of sonnets and triolets, in exchange for 1,000 mile tickets. Epic poems, containing descriptions of scenery, dining cars, etc., will be published at special rates.

8.—General superintendents sending requests for the suppression of news must accompany their requests with ten-dollar bills—not necessary for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

CURRENT WIT.

BUSINESS IS BUSINESS.

In a small town out West an ex-county Judge is cashier of the bank.

"The check is all right, sir," he said to a stranger, "but the evidence you offer in identifying yourself as the person to whose order it is drawn is scarcely sufficient."

"I've known you to hang a man on less evidence, Judge," was the stranger's response.

"Quite likely," replied the ex judge, "but when it comes to letting go of cold cash we have to be careful."

SMALL BEGINNINGS.

"Yes, sir," he said proudly, "I began life a barefooted boy, and see where I am now."

"Yes, you are way up, but you had a big advantage at the start."

"How so?"

"You began life a barefooted boy; the rest of us began life as barefooted babies."

A PROOF OF CELEBRITY.

"Did you know that Miss de Smythe is an actress?" asked Hobson, speaking of a mutual friend.

"No," replied Robinson. "Is she well known?"

A WIFE'S REQUEST.

"Did you look under the bed?" inquired a wife of her husband after he had turned out the light and got fairly settled for a night's rest.

"No," was the blunt response.

"Well, suppose there's a man there?" said the alarmed woman.

"I don't want to see him if there is," was the answer.

"Well, get up and look; I shall not let you rest until you do."

He knew her of old, and after fumbling around found a match, lit it and looked under the bed. Then he threw the match away, got into bed and whispered:

"My dear, there is a man under the bed."

"Oh, get out!" was the quick response. "You can't fool me. I know better."

Then she turned over perfectly satisfied and went to sleep. She had accomplished her object.

A PUN IN DISTRESS.

"Oh, Mr. President, the cashier—the cashier!" stammered the paying teller as the President entered the bank.

"Well, well! What of the cashier?" asked the President, impatiently.

"He's gone, and there's no cash here.

Nervous Patient (in dentist's chair)—Will it hurt much, doctor?

Dentist (re-assuringly)—I'll guarantee it won't hurt a bit.

Nervous Patient (not convinced)—But what if it did, doctor? What would your guarantee amount to?

Dentist (evidently sure of himself)—If I hurt you, my dear sir, I'll pull every tooth in your head, and it won't cost you a cent.

NOT CONTAGIOUS.

Several evenings ago Major Stofah went up on Sixteenth street to see a young lady to whom he has been very attentive. She was not visible at first, and her twelve-year old brother entertained the Major. After various questions the kid remarked:

"You ain't contagious, are you?"

"Why, Johnny, what do you mean by that?" asked the Major, with an innocent laugh of surprise.

"Oh, nothin' I guess; only I heard mother say you wasn't, 'cause sister had been trying to catch you all winter, and she couldn't do it."

A COMING HUMORIST.

"Mamma," said Bobby, 'I know why a burned child dreads the fire."

"Why?" asked mamma.

"Because when he gets burned once the burn makes him smart enough not to go near the stove again.

PLENTY OF TIME TO FLIRT.

Railroad Masher—Now that that man has gone into the smoking car I'll get up a little flirtation with that pretty woman he left behind.

Omaha Friend—Be careful. He may return suddenly.

Railroad Masher—Oh, he won't be back for three or four hours.

Omaha Friend—Sure?

Railroad Masher—Certain. He's her husband.

HE WAS FROM INDIANA.

"I've just moved here from Indianapolis," observed a stranger to a local real estate agent, "and I'd like to rent a house of about six rooms."

"Very well," said the agent, "I have just the house that will suit you. Good location, six rooms and bath room——"

"Six rooms and what?"

"Bath room."

"What's that?"

A LETTER

From the Mother of Miss Jessie Bonesteele.

Rochester, N. Y., April 22, 1886.

GENTLEMEN:—It is with pleasure I add my testimonial to the many well-known cures which your most excellent remedy has effected. For more than two years I was a great sufferer with rheumatism, being scarcely free from pain during the time. I found no relief until I procured Dr. Pardee's remedy, and it cured me completely. It is now two years since I discontinued its use and I have had no symptoms of the disease since. I know from my own and from the experience of many others also, that it will cure any case of rheumatism or neuralgia.

I am, very truly yours,

MRS. H. S. BONESTEELE.

Syracuse, N. Y.

GENTS:—I have been troubled with Rheumatism for three years, at times very badly afflicted; was in that condition about two weeks ago, when I got a bottle of Dr. Pardee's Rheumatic Remedy, and in three days time was greatly relieved, and have not been troubled with it since I finished this bottle. I feel like recommending it in the highest terms, as I believe it will do all that is claimed for it.

Yours truly,

JOHN BLODGETT,

62 Madison St.

Lockport, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN:—I think the medicine prepared by the Pardee Medicine Company is in fact the best rheumatic medicine now on the market; its equal is not known. My boy only six years old was confined to his bed with rheumatism; I got a bottle of the medicine and in a few days he was out of bed and playing around the house. I can cheerfully recommend this medicine to all rheumatic sufferers.

From its wonderful power over this terrible disease, when first offering this now celebrated remedy to the public, Dr. Pierce thought seriously of calling it his "Consumption Cure," but considered that name as too limited for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for consumption of the lungs, but for all

CHRONIC DISEASES OF THE

About two and a half years ago I discovered a little sore on my chest, and the doctors pronounced it cancer. I have tried a number of physicians, but without receiving any permanent benefit. Among them number were one or two specialists. The medicine they applied was like fire to the sore, causing intense pain. I saw a statement in the papers telling what S. S. S. had done for others similarly afflicted. I procured some at once. Before I had used the second bottle the neighbors could notice that my cancer was healing up. My general health had been bad for two or three years—I had a hacking cough and spit blood continually. I had a severe pain in my breast. After taking six bottles of S. S. S. my cough left me and I grew stouter than I had been for several years. My cancer has healed over all but a little spot about the size of a half dime, and it is rapidly disappearing. I would advise every one with cancer to give S. S. S. a fair trial.
