Increase in Cadets At West Point Advocated

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3.—An increase in the cadet corps at the West Point military academy from 1354 to 2500 is recommended by Brig. Gen. Douglas MacArthur, superintendent, to the secretary of war, made public today. The academy, the report shows, can train only one-third of the officers needed even for a peace time army of 150,000 men.

The editor of a "thriller" magazine ordered a story of a certain length and discovered that the author had written several hundred words too many. In order to make the story fit the space at his disposal the last few paragraphs were condensed into a single sentence.

"This is the way it read: 'Von Berken took a small glass of whiskey, his hat, his departure, no notice to his pursuers, a revolver out of his pocket, and finally, his life.'"

Fashions for Americans

THE suit with matching cape is popular both in sports and dressy modes, coats that have attached capes continue to be featured, and the dress that has its own cape is one of the season's favorites. In fact, this type of costume has been so much liked for fall and winter that some of the designers are offering it again for spring. The novelty fabrics featured in the spring garments making the cape and dress outfit seem change in the actual style line of those so far developed. Certainly for southern resort wear the dress with cape to match will be popular, and southern resort apparel is usually a forerunner of what will be shown for general wear in the very early spring.

The outfit illustrated features a rather straight line dress and full-length matching cape made of a dark velvet, both dress and cape being trimmed with trimmer fur. A line of trim of the fur completes the outfit. The cape is lined with black, and a touch of black appears in the trimming of the dress.

A smart cape and dress outfit of the sports type made of wool plaid shows a skirt with slip-over sleeveless jacket reaching about to the hips. The long cape of plaid is lined with plain color silk matching the little skirt or blouse worn underneath the jacket.

Boy of Seven Premier Peer of Great Britain, With Vast Estates and Lovely Homes

Although but a child of 7, the little earl of Shrewsbury is the premier earl of all England. He came into the title on the death of his grandfather, a picturesque figure in English social life.

In some respects this little English chap is much closer to Americans than his other titled countrymen. He has an American stepfather, Richard Edmunds Permore, the boy's father, Viscount Ingestre, an officer in the king's army, died in 1915. Two years later, Permore, an assistant secretary of the United States embassy in London, married the widow, the beautiful viscountess.

The title which the boy now holds is one of the oldest English peerages, dating back to the time of William the Conqueror. And with it he not only receives an estate of 25,000 acres and several flourishing business enterprises, but also two "seats," in Ingestre hall, at Staffordshire, and Alton hall, at Stafford, both of which are numbered among the finest properties of the islands.

Of his ancestors, Hugh de Talbot once held a castle against the armies of King Henry I; another, the Shrewsbury who appeared in Shakespeare's writings, was a famous fighter in the earlier days in England's history, taking part in the levations in France, until he was finally captured. The sixth earl was responsible for Mary Queen of Scots during her captivity, and later assisted in her execution. The twelfth earl was among the group of nobles who presented William of Orange the invitation to occupy the English throne.

Old Earl Picturesque
Of the grandfather, whom the present earl succeeded, much has been, and can be, said. At one time he supplied the dowagers with one of the juiciest scandal tidbits of the generation. Perhaps Americans will remember him more for his conduct when the American polo team visited England in 1902 to play for the international cup. At that time, the earl, a member of the British team, stopped the first game and preferred charges against Lawrence Waterbury, American "back" of cruelty to his pony. Waterbury was wearing spurs. The incident was later dismissed, but it caused ill feeling against the earl, both at home and in America.

In his youth, the earl was horse-whipped by the husband of a beautiful woman with whom he had eloped, a Mrs. Mundy. Following that incident, the earl and his mammoth fled to the continent, where, incidentally, they toured the fashionable resorts. Later, tiring of this diversion, the two chartered a yacht and cruised the Mediterranean for a few days, while Mrs. Mundy waited in France, he was met at the station by the mother, who immediately and publicly chastised the premier earl of England and Ireland by beating him with a harem umbrella. When Mrs. Mundy's divorce decree was made absolute, the pair were married. The father of the present earl was their son.

His Hobby Was Cabs
Despite his vice, the old earl had an extremely profitable and sometimes amusing hobby, cabs. At one time he was said to be the largest cab owner in the world, having somewhere in the neighborhood of 20,000 cabs in operation on London streets. He also had companies in Paris and other European cities. His vehicles were always the best and were driven by the best horses obtainable. The carriages themselves were kept sleek and span, highly polished and richly ornamented. The horses were always carefully groomed, and the harness gleamed with silver trappings. He was the first large cab owner to equip his vehicles with rubber tires, a much talked of departure in those days.

The old earl took keen joy in his cab trade, as he termed it, and often the fashionable and aristocratic after-dinner crowds on the "strang" would see him, mounted on the box of his own cabs, hawking for fares. With the coming of the motor car he replaced many of the cabs with taxis, but still retained enough taxi up to the time of his death that the "cabs" were still familiar sights on the London streets.

Earl's Sister Runs
BIG DAIRY BUSINESS

Scarcely a week passes in England without an announcement that another titled personage has taken up some plain, everyday business. The latest to be added to an already long list is Lady Victoria Murray, fourth sister of the earl of Munmore.

Some time ago she began dairy farming as a hobby. Now she finds it pays so well it is continuing it as a straight business proposition. On her 300-acre farm at Whiteley, she has a herd of 110 Shorthorn and Friesian dairy cattle. By motor truck and train she has marketed some 40,000 gallons of milk this year. In addition, part of the land is taken up with a big poultry farm and 145,000 eggs have been shipped to various markets, besides large quantities of dressed poultry.

As a purchaser of fancy poultry, Lady Victoria shows keen judgment, and is the possessor of some extremely fine pedigreed stock.

BERMUDA STILL BARS
AUTOS AND TROLLEYS

Motor cars are still to be barred from the public highways in Bermuda, according to the recent decision of the local government, which also rejected the offer of an American company to build an electric trolley line from Hamilton to St. George, a distance of twenty miles. Both matters have been presented for consideration the last two years, and regularly turned down.

In taking this stand the inhabitants of Bermuda have had a keen eye to business. The tabor on rapid transit, in short, has enabled the picturesque group of islands, with their balmy climate and beautiful sub-tropical features, to retain all the quaintness and charm of a remote spot in the old world; although scarcely forty-eight hours' journey from New York.

In the absence of motors the bicycle reigns supreme in Bermuda, as a majority of the able-bodied inhabitants use the wheel and a large proportion of visitors adopt the same custom. The roads of Bermuda, well laid and as smooth as asphalt, are exceptionally well adapted to bicycling.

Animal Life Found
In Meteor Samples

Examination of many specimens of meteorites has revealed the presence in them of living organisms. On being placed in the laboratory under suitable breeding conditions, the samples came to life and multiplied.

Further study of these micro-organisms will go a long way in verifying the claims of certain scientists as to the animal life existing in other worlds.

This well is one of the deepest in that section, the hole being down some 4200 feet into the deep oil sand, and is the biggest deep sand well by far which has been struck in the local district. Preparations for bringing in the well had been in progress for the past several days and everything was ready to control the gusher when it arrived, consequently there was no loss of oil. According to the oil men, the well is now in operations. Mr. Chapman's revenue will be 500 barrels a day, which at the price of oil will net him about $750 a day.

The home of Mrs. H. C. Johnson in Hillcrest drive was thrown open Wednesday afternoon to the women of the Presbyterian church, who upon this occasion were "at home" to the newcomers in their midst. Baskets of glowing solanetia and holly throughout the house, and the Christmas needle work the ladies were "busily" engaged in, lent a holiday air to the delightful social hour. During the course of the afternoon Miss Marquette Salverson, in costume sang a group of Indian songs. Miss Salverson possesses a voice of unusual quality and sweetness, and her friends looked forward to a promising future for her. Mesdames C. A. Smith and W. A. This well is one of the deepest in that section, the hole being down some 4200 feet into the deep oil sand, and is the biggest deep sand well by far which has been struck in the local district. Preparations for bringing in the well had been in progress for the past several days and everything was ready to control the gusher when it arrived, consequently there was no loss of oil. According to the oil men, the well is now in operations. Mr. Chapman's revenue will be 500 barrels a day, which at the price of oil will net him about $750 a day.

News Notes of the Oil Fields

NEWPORT AND SAN JOAQUIN HILLS

The big shipping of oil that the Laguna Beach Oil Association led the world to believe at $2.50 failed to materialize. On drilling out the cement at $2.50 water found and very little evidence of oil. The well operations have been shrouded in mystery for some time and information was difficult to obtain.

The Tepach Oil Company has resumed operations. Eight inch pipe is going in and actual drilling starts again at 1875. The hundred thousand dollars additional moving picture capital reported to have been invested in the well did not materialize. However the company has secured additional capital and will go ahead.

The H. T. & K. Syndicate set a string of pipe at 310 feet and cemented.

Drilling on the Nu Santa Oil Company's No. 1 is now at 2550 in the well. The showings thus far have been fair, but nothing to get excited over.

At 2000 feet even the W. A. G. Oil Company set a string of ten inch pipe and cemented. Wirscher-Gray No. 1 is drilling at 2000 feet in blue shale. W. A. G. Oil and Petroleum is ready to spud in at No. 1.

The drilling operations of the Interstate Oil Company includes Heights No. 1 standing cemented at 230 feet, 12 1/2, and Norris No. 1 drilling by pipe at 2100.

At 3325 feet the Lone Rock Consolidated's No. 1 is drilling in brown sandy shale and is showing some nice oil colors and quite a bit of gas. The well is really looking better than at any previous time.

HAWTHORNE-INGLEWOOD

The Kittelman Company at Hawthorne has two wells on which work is still continuing. A production test is to be made on No. 3 (Hicks) as soon as the cement sets. Play Del Rey is running up to proceed with the rotary at 1575 feet.

Watch Closely for Disease in Flock and Prevent Its Appearance, Says Expert

The most reliable and profitable method for curing poultry is to be on guard against disease. It is not good business to be careless just because such an efficient remedy is at hand. Prevention in most cases is not difficult nor costly, and pays big dividends.

Some Diseases Spread Rapidly

The poultry flock is subject to a number of diseases, some of which spread rapidly and cause big losses. The birds may also be infested with various parasites, some of which live on the surface of the body and others in the various parts of the interior. Such parasites, whether they are on the inside or outside, are injurious because they take a part of the nourishment which should be used for the flesh or to produce eggs, and also because of irritation and inflammation of the parts they attack.

The contagious diseases caused by germs and the weakness and loss of flesh caused by the internal parasites which the poultryman must consider are the most important conditions in order to keep his birds in health. These germs and parasites can be kept down by suitable preventative measures, and the aim and study of the diseases should be to learn prevention rather than cure. Medicines may be given advantageously at times but as a rule, as has been suggested, it is better to kill the source. There is another reason not yet mentioned that makes the killing of sick birds desirable. Birds that first contract disease are apt to be the weakest ones in the flock and should be culled out.

The more birds on a farm or plot of ground and the more they are crowded the greater the danger from contagion and parasites, and the more important the measures for excluding, eradicating and preventing development of these causes of disease. Beginning with a flock it is a good idea to get birds of good conformation and that are free from any appearance of disease or parasites. They should be put upon ground which is already free from these causes of disease.

Use Eggs From Healthy Flocks

The best way to do this is to secure eggs from a flock that has shown no indication of contagious disease for at least a year. If precautions are taken to keep the eggs absolutely clean and they are hatched in a thoroughly cleaned incubator the young chicks will have a much better chance. They will also grow up with a better chance of escaping disease if they are raised in clean brooders and upon ground where poultry has not run for some time.

Sometimes these directions can be followed explicitly. If all the available ground has been recently used for poultry, fowls should be taken from that part which is to be used for the new flock, a good coating of fresh lime or lime applied to the face, and a few days later it should be plowed. Then it should be cultivated a week, and finally sowed to a small grain crop. In a few months the greater part of the germs will be destroyed, but it is better to leave the ground uncultivated by poultry until winter has passed.

It is more difficult to raise a new flock free from parasites if the eggs are hatched by hens, for hens may carry lice and mites and various parasites. For this reason it is a good idea to select hens for brooding from a flock free from disease and pests.

To keep germs and parasites from developing to a great extent, poultry houses need to be cleaned frequently. The drinking fountains and feed troughs need a weekly washing with boiling water or other disinfectant. Fly lice or mites are found on the birds or in their houses, the roosts and adjoining parts of the walls must be painted with commercial carbolineum or a mixture of 1 quart kerosene and 1 teaspoonful of crude carbolic acid or crude creosol, or the house may be whitewashed with freshly slaked lime or with kerosene emulsion. Dose the fowl with sodium fluoride or lime powder.

Use Disinfectants Freely

Good disinfectants kill germs of contagious diseases, the external parasites, and in some cases parasitic worms. In applying a disinfectant to the interior of a house it should be worked into all the cracks and crevices. Spread over the ceiling and the floor, the roosts, dropping boards, and nest boxes. These germ killers are most easily applied to walls and ceilings with a sprayer or with a brush. Ordinary lime wash, made from freshly slaked lime, is very good for the roosts. But in a case of an actual outbreak of disease add 6 ounces of crude carbolic acid to each gallon. About this time of the year it is very important for the poultryman to protect the birds in his flock from the cause of disease and parasites. The cold rains of fall and early winter make the fowls much more susceptible than they are at other seasons, and diseases have a much better chance to get hold of them. Proper precautions of the kind mentioned, which are discussed in detail in Farmers' Bulletin No. 927, published by the United States department of agriculture, with comfortable quarters and good feed, will do much toward preventing loss.

Charles may find fair hunting there. Or he might go in for growing grapes and making the wine of the country. The climate is delightful when the storms don't blow across the ocean from Honolulu. The little Hawaii Islands can grow up there under the healthiest conditions. Unless the exile of Charles extends to his offspring, most of them will doubtless elect to leave the island for their school days and for the subsequent serious business of life, which even Hawaiians have to consider nowadays.

The island, with 3,300 square miles, is more than six times larger than St. Helena. Mountains intersected with deep gorges rise to a height of 4,900 feet.

A little boy, the youngest member of a large family, was taken to see his married sister's new baby. He seemed more interested in the contents of the baby's basket than in the baby, and after examining the pretty trinkets picked up - powder puff, Much surprised at his discovery and looking rather shocked, he said: "Isn't she rather young for that sort of thing?"

If you are ashamed of your calling hire a boy to call for you.

Karl Had Far Better Place of Exile Than Did Napoleon

Every healthy boy dreams longingly of life on an island, but ex-emperors don't seem to like islands a single bit. Just experiment with the next ex-emperor you meet—look him in the eye and say: "I know a nice little island," and see if he doesn't get a cold chill. That's why it's always a painful job to "see off" one's ex-emperor friends when they're embarking, under the international auspices, not to mention a smart military escort, for some lovely, lonely island with very superior scenery and a peach of a climate. Ex-emperors are so emotional, you know.

Napoleon on his way to St. Helena was dreadfully peevish, and now poor Charles of Hungary is on his way to Madeira, after a sorry sendoff which made his sailing a melancholy affair. Charles has an advantage over Napoleon in being accompanied into exile by his devoted ex-Empress Zita and their children, who are soon to be increased in number. Napoleon had only a bevy of old marshals and other hangers on, who would hardly suppress their yawns when the ex-emperor bragged of his victories.

Charles is worse off than Napoleon, in one respect, and that is that he hasn't any victories to brag of. He never was master of Europe. He never saw the streets of Cairo. As an exiled ex-emperor he lacks what the highbrows call a background. He's just as good looking young cavalry officer of royal blood, boosted unexpectedly during the war and now left "waiting at the church," as Vespa Victoria used to sing.

In the matter of islands, Charles has Napoleon beaten a block. Madeira is much superior to St. Helena. Madeira has a reputation. It gave its name to an admirable wine, of which a rare old cork was once considered a propitious and gentlemanly legacy from one's grandfather. And it's quite a fashionable refuge for rich life exlopers from England.

If Napoleon could have had troops about his victories instead of that bunch of weary old campaigners he might have lived much longer. But his island was picked out for him as the most god forsaken spot on earth and the least likely to be the scene of another escape from Elba.

It had been just a calling station for ships sailing between England and the Cape of Good Hope. Its inhabitants were few and uninteresting, socially quite beneath the regard of an ex-emperor. The island itself was just the summit of an ancient volcano, rising 2,700 feet above the sea, with an area of forty-five square miles. In the center was an old farm house, Longwood, in which Napoleon spent his last painful and petulant years, presiding over a bored little imitation court, sparring with the English governor of the island and thinking up grandiose phrases for his will.

The life of genius is marked by violent extremes. St. Helena was the grim contrast made necessary by the imperial grandeur of the Corsican's heyday. But Charles, whose adventures have been tame affairs compared to Napoleon's, is to have a truly pleasing exile. No savage loneliness is possible in Madeira, for the island is exceptionally thickly populated for a territory without a single town—almost 200 to the square. Doubtlessly the Portuguese government, which governs the little volcanic island as a province of the republic, will provide Charles and Zita with a suitable residence. There is a population of 144,225, including many Negroes, who do all the hard work.

Mystery Man's Death
Under Investigation

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 9.—Fearing that foul play caused the death of an unidentified man in a building in course of construction at 724 Wall street, early yesterday morning, Detective Sergeant Hamilton and Geo. E. Smith consulted yesterday afternoon with the coroner's office, hoping to find means of determining the exact cause of the bullets which entered the back of the slain man's head. The name of G. M. Brown was found on some of the personal effects, but it is not the name of the victim, officers say. He was about 50 years old, five feet six inches tall and about 135 pounds in weight. He was perfectly bald, was well dressed in a brown suit with a fancy belt buckle, bearing the initial "M." He wore a striped white shirt and a green felt hat.

It keeps a hypocrite busy trying to convince himself that he is honest.

STILL IS SET UP IN FIELD, FARMER FINDS CORN GONE

When L. B. Perry, Cass county, Nebraska, came to the center of his 80-acre corn field in the course of his husking operations the other day he found an acre of it already husked and a whisky still in the center, full of cold mash and with several tubes and pails near by. Prints on the ground showed where legs and legs had stood. The ground about was covered with shelled corn and corn was soaking in one of the tubs.

As near as Perry could determine, about eighty bushels of corn had been made into whisky and carried away without his knowledge.

He left the apparatus, with the intention of carting it to his home, but when he returned later it had all disappeared.

PORTLAND, Ore., Dec. 8.—The University of Washington's "splendid isolation," as far as the northwest collegiate conference is concerned is a thing of the past.

The Bundodgers became members in good standing in the conference. The Gonzaga University, Spokane, did not fare so well, but the conference, while turning down the Spokane school's application, sent along some consolation prize in the shape of a promise to return favorable action next year if Gonzaga obeyed conference rules.

"Hypnotic Lover" Wins Law Suit for Damages

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 9.—"Vampire" eyes versus "hypnotic eyes." The "hypnotic" won. The jury was out ten minutes. The "vampire" eyes ran tears. This, in brief, is the story of Mrs. Geraldine McWhirter's attempt to collect $50,000 damages from Dr. Reginald S. Pether, whom she charged with having made "hypnotic love" to her.

The case had been on trial four days, filled with sensations. Mrs. McWhirter charged that Dr. Pether possessed a hypnotic eye and that this mystic stare, aided by drugs, had "sent her soul into spiritalism," and while there the doctor had wronged her. She charged it broke her health and ruined her happiness. Also, she asserted, it spelled financial ruin for her modest shop.

But the doctor declared otherwise. He confessed he made love to the comely modiste, but he said, however, that he had been "vamped."

Vampire Eyes Charged
Mrs. McWhirter, he alleged, had "vampire eyes," deep and blue and mystic. When she looked upon him, he alleged, he forgot his wife, his child, his fortune and his reputation, and went with her. "She took all I had," he testified. "I could not resist until, with a supreme effort, I ran away to New York. I did not give her drugs. I did not hypnotize her—for I do not believe in such rot—and every time she came to my office she did so of her own volition. She would never let me out of her sight, day or night. She blasted my life!"

Mrs. McWhirter's story, however, went something like this:

"He held a strange and mystic spell over me. He told me that he had studied hypnotism in Egypt. When he would look at me I would fall into a daze. I seemed to walk in beautiful forests, entrancing lakes, and always hear his voice calling, 'Geraldine, sweetheart, come to me.' He had complete control over me. It seemed like an impelling force would bring me to his office every day. I could not resist!"

Couple Reconciled
Though Dr. Pether asserted that his life had been blasted by vampire eyes, it came out in the trial that his wife had dropped her suit for divorce wherein Mrs. McWhirter was named "the other woman" and that the couple are reconciled.

Mrs. McWhirter, it also developed, has since her affair with the doctor, been married.

The case came to a sudden close yesterday afternoon and Attorney Frank Hinton, for the doctor, and Attorney J. E. Brown, for the plaintiff, waived argument and the case was submitted to the jury.

Delightful Tale of Orient Told in California Movie

Pola Negri in "One Arabian Night"

Pale moonlight bathing the minarets and flooding the winding streets, figures darting to and fro in the semi-darkness; clandestine meetings of lovers; an air of mystery hovering above all.

Enchanting in the daytime, Bagdad did not exude to the full the glamor and romance which are its crowning glory until the shades of night drew a softening veil. Not until then did Bagdad begin to live; not till then did its many adventures and lovers emerge.

Such is the Bagdad of "One Arabian Night," a delightful tale of the Orient, showing at the California Theater today and tomorrow. It is an Associated First National attraction with Pola Negri as the star. Slept in the spirit of the storied east, it is fascinating entertainment such as has not been seen before on the screen. It has been directed by Ernest Lubitsch, who has gained immortal fame as the producer of "Passion" and "Oxygene Blood."

Based on the alluring "Arabian Nights Entertainments," it unfolds a story of unbridled emotion, merciless treachery and the secrets of the harem. Pola Negri appears as the untamed dancing sprite of the boundless desert, whose beauty and magnetism win for her a place as queen in the harem of the sheik.

The scenes depicting Bagdad's night life are especially vivid and interesting. Vexed women hurrying to their trysting places; a prince of blood pursuing love with conquest in his eyes; skulking, turbaned Persians, hands on their daggers, lurking in the shadows and peering furtively down the crooked streets; harem girls weaving of that which they will never possess—true love—sitting in latticed windows and staring at the benevolent moon; the clattering of hoofs as a troop of horsemen dash by—that is Bagdad by night, home of romance and intrigue.

Spectacular are the settings which the director has utilized for the filming of the story; sumptuous are the furnishings of the harem and the palace; awe-inspiring are the ensembles for thousands of persons pass before the camera.

Color of Shell Makes No Difference in Egg Quality, Says U.S. Expert

Although the color of an eggshell is no indication of the chemical composition of its contents, people in different cities and in different parts of the country have rather decided preferences for either white or brown eggs. The wise producer considers the likes and dislikes of his prospective customers, even though they may be based on a mistaken notion. A brown egg is just as nutritious as a white egg and a white egg is just as full of meat as a brown one, says the United States department of agriculture. If a person's color biasocracy is satisfied, however, he may get a little more good out of the egg he eats.

The color of an egg is largely, or almost entirely, dependent upon the breed of the bird that laid it. In general the American breeds—Plymouth Rocks, Rhode Island Reds, and Wyandottes—lay brown eggs. As all these breeds have red ear lobes, it may be said that red lobes mean brown eggs. The brown egg is popular in New England and brings a premium on the Boston and Providence markets. Although the content of this egg is the same as that of a white one, there is a difference in the covering. The shells of brown eggs are harder and the skin just underneath the shell is tougher. In hatching, the chicks have a little harder work getting out than those that happened to develop in shells of lighter hue.

In New York the white egg brings a premium of 7 to 10 cents a dozen at most seasons, but it is probable that the New Yorker gets no more nourishment nor enjoyment out of his breakfast than the Bostonian, who pays a similar premium for brown eggs. Owners of poultry farms are well aware of this preference in the metropolitan area, and as a result the commercial poultry farms in New York, New Jersey, Delaware, and Pennsylvania keep fowls, mostly Leghorns, that produce white eggs. The white egg breeds, in addition to the Leghorns, are the Black Spanish, the Minorca, and all the Mediterranean breeds. All of these breeds have white ear lobes.

In Philadelphia the preference is largely for white eggs and this market draws largely from the same territory as New York for its highest grade eggs. Chicago gets farm eggs from all parts of the middle west that are sorted and graded by those who pack them. There is no pronounced preference in that city. The Pacific coast prefers white eggs, and all of the large poultry plants in which California is famous, keep Leghorns.

The Asiatic fowls, meat breeds that are kept only in small numbers, have red lobes and lay golden sized, brown eggs. The red lobe brown egg, rule held good in all cases until the department of agriculture developed a new breed. This new breed, the Lamona, is large enough to satisfy the farmer, the back yard poultryman, and the packer, and still is attractive to the egg consumer. One of its most striking peculiarities is that it has a red ear lobe and lays a white egg. With so many big markets preferring the white egg this breed, with the additional advantages of size, good quality of meat, yellow skin and legs, ought to be popular.

Were the Soul of Mercy Dwells

DORMITORY FOR NURSES

Our County Hospital Monument to Charity

THE Soul of Mercy, following a moment of holy meditation gloriously significant to humanity, whispered an inspired message to the arch-type citizenship of Orange County, and they invariably responsive to righteous appeal gave the inspiration most beautiful expression in the Orange County Hospital, a splendid, beautiful institution, whose broad, genuinely useful human service has steadily lifted its standard in seven years time to an eminence which commands the admiration, appreciation, affection and support of all who are sincerely interested in the welfare of mankind!

"Whosoever Will"

The friendly portals of the Orange County Hospital swing freely to all the sick and world-weary, to all the weary souls of suffering, to all the broken-spirited, to all the burdened hearts, to all who have been wounded and wrecked in the fast, furious, reckless battle of modern life. That pale description hardly portrays the type of "growth-up" who seek this excellent source of healing and hope.

But where are the words to express the holiest emotions, the touching pathos, the finest impulses of heart and soul and mind that cluster about the tender reception and the blessed work that follows? The roses to the wan, faded faces of the little children? Patient, suffering, sweet little souls of suffering, to all the creatures—lovable little patients, who are, of course, given the tenderest care and consideration.

Love and Science Serve Together. Here, Love and Science meet all human big or small, rich or poor on an equal footing. Each case is soon thoroughly understood through the most careful and exhaustive study and positive diagnosis. If there is still a ray of hope for recovery left it quickly responds to conscientious scientific medical or surgical treatment combined with institutional psychology that banishes all fear and brings the soothing, serene sense of peace, harmony and security. Psychology is now universally recognized as a most powerful factor in the art of healing, and this subtle power is everywhere present at the Orange County Hospital.

Dr. Zaiser and Staff

It seems appropriate to pay a deserved tribute to the great physician, surgeon and executive, who not only direct the destiny of Orange County Hospital, but manages the big farm in connection. Now add to this dual responsibility the fact that he performs most of all the major operations. How he finds time to give so much personal attention to every case under the shelter of the hospital is beyond ordinary understanding. Search the medical institutions of the state of California and you will not find a higher type of director. Dr. Zaiser possesses a fine personality. He comes into the private room or general ward with the refreshing influence of cool, pure exhilarating air. He is not glib with the "tiger's grin." He smiles naturally and his frank honesty and cultured sense of consideration invites the faith of all the patients who come in personal touch with him on his daily rounds. To his big business task he brings a keen, forthright, constructive versatility. A genius for doing a vast amount of hard work has enabled him to build up a wonderfully efficient organization, every member of which is loyally devoted to the highest ideals, and work with head, heart and hands to render genuine human service. Dr. Zaiser has set for the Orange County Hospital.

We pause to take a bouquet of appreciation to Beatrice Grant, the capable matron of Orange County Hospital, who possesses the rare gift of exacting the strictest discipline through what appears to be the uninitiated to be just the exercise of kindness, consideration and good common sense.

Flowers For Nurses

There's the staff of splendid nurses! Here their good hearts! These fine women, who lead a life of sacrifice, are the sweet presences which come into the sick room with a trend as soft as an angel and whose patient sympathetic ministrations banish pain and fear and bring peace and hope! So, here's a basket of forget-me-nots for the nurses!

It is a musty concept that the great hospital is a huge pile of marble, granite or brick patched together with mortar and distinguished by architectural design peculiar to its mission. The great hospital possesses a heart, soul and mind—the heart, soul and mind of the great men and women who are willing to serve and sacrifice back and build them. No hospital can be greater than its active staff. So, the personal equation—the spiritual side—the holding of high ideals being of the first importance, we have you just a glimpse of these factors in the development and success of Orange County Hospital. Now we will glance at the central building.

Central Building

The central hospital building is admirably designed for its purpose. The rooms and wards are spacious, perfectly ventilated and sanitary and so arranged that they may be flooded with fresh air and sunshine. The building has what would ordinarily be called a "basement" but it is not a basement since no part of it is underground, a rather unique arrangement. On this floor is a laboratory and X-ray department as well as a large ward for specific cases, and a smaller one for mental cases. On the first floor the handsome executive offices of the superintendent and matron are located at the right and left of the main entrance to the hospital. On the same floor are the departments caring for the medical, infectious and mental cases. On the second floor are the surgical, obstetric, delivery, nursery and children's wards. There is a large general ward on the third floor as well as a supply, sewing, bandage and generally utility department.

The building is crowned with a sun parlor which is very alluring as well as beneficial to convalescents. But big and roomy as the main building now is, plans are already under way providing for additional departments. An atmosphere of quietness, calmness, cleanliness and cheerfulness distinguishes every department.

Some Cozy Cottages

Immediately back of the central building is "the court of cozy cottages," forming a semi-circle about a broad lawn, at the end of which is a chapel and a library. These picturesque little homes covered with clinging vines and nesting in beds of bright colored flowers are occupied by the indigent patients of Orange County—four persons to each cottage. And it is interesting to see how each resident is as able via with each other in beautifying this pretty village of "God's Own." It is a delightful place for the aged, the indigent, the helpless to watch out the sunset of their lives—the welcome guests of a whole-hearted community.

The dormitory for the nurses is a beautiful building of graceful attractive design. This is the study and home of the faithful, hard-working nurses. Every comfort and convenience contributing to their comfort is installed. There is a clever, little kitchenette where the nurses may prepare a luncheon when entertaining their personal friends, and it is unnecessary to say that this department is an extremely active one! There is good music, good singing and good dancing, for what young, healthy girl does not crave all these diversions—even if they have to play for themselves, sing to themselves and dance with each other! The first floor of this building is used as a class room for student nurses. The second floor is the regular quarters for the nurses—reception, dining room, living rooms and library. There is a sun parlor and special sleeping quarters on the roof.

All the cooking for patients as well as employees is done by a staff of excellent cooks under the supervision of a specially trained chef. Only the very purest and best food stuffs are used and it is supplied to everybody in abundance. All the vegetables used are raised on the hospital farm as well as most of the meat.

Private Dining Rooms

In another part of this building there are three separate dining rooms, one for the nurses, one for the employees, one for the indigent patients. The atmosphere of all departments of this service building is home-like, bright, cheerful and absolutely clean.

There is a first class steam laundry operated by the most modern machinery to take care of all the laundry of patients as well as employees. This department like all the others shows that cleanliness is rated next to godliness.

Artesian wells supply the purest water for the central hospital and other buildings, while a new reservoir has been built to hold a sufficient reserve supply of water for fire

Orange County Farm

The Orange County farm is fast approaching a state where it may be called "model." All kinds of vegetables are raised and an orange grove not only supplies the needs of the hospital but is a lucrative source of income, helping to support the institution. Considerable attention is given to hog raising and the farm boasts of a herd that is conspicuous for its high breeding. They furnish the meat for hospital patients and farm employees as well. They are housed in a highly sanitary way, here as everywhere else the most scrupulous cleanliness is observed. But over and above all, the feature of the farm are the herd of pure-bred Holsteins and a model dairy!

Model Dairy On Farm

The Orange County Dairy has been authoritatively declared to be the most sanitary dairy in the state of California and this official declaration has rewarded the earnest efforts of the board of supervisors and Hospital Superintendent Dr. Zaiser to establish a model dairy.

A herd of registered Holsteins is of primary importance to the most desirable results in acquiring a first class dairy, but fine as the animals that compose the herd, there is also cause for pardonable pride in the dairy barn which houses them. The county caught the vision of leadership in dairy cattle improvement and this vision has been realized through the most careful, consistent and constructive work, which will be broadened and bettered from year to year.

Dr. Zaiser, who is one of the most enthusiastic advocates of a dairy being conducted on highly sanitary as well as highly scientific lines, displays his personal pride of achievement in showing visitors this essential part of the farm organization. Dr. Zaiser rightly contends that milk is the main item of diet for sick persons, as a food, and particularly so in the main item of diet for tubercular patients at the farm. Large quantities of pure milk and cream are used at the hospital and farm and the dairy supplies supply for both.

Dr. Zaiser, through careful supervision, knows that the daily production of milk is pure, clean and healthy. Scientific methods are used in feeding and in the care of the cattle, and of the barn every precaution known to dairy science is used to preserve absolute cleanliness. In a few words, this dairy is not only a valuable asset and object lesson to Orange County, but it has become an indispensable factor in maintaining the high standard set by the Orange County Hospital. Herman Hausman.

By human experimentation the human tick has been proved to be the carrier of the disease relapsing fever in Panama, according to information received in Washington. Three human volunteers, who had been infected with the fever after tests on white rats and monkeys had indicated that the ticks carried the disease, were injected with blood from one animal to another.

In the experiments conducted by Lewis H. Bates, Lawrence D. Dunn and Joe H. St. John of the board of health laboratory and Ancon hospital, in the Canal Zone, one volunteer had injected beneath his skin some blood from a white rat infected with relapsing fever. Into another the patients was injected hypodermically a suspension of naturally infected ticks. While the other volunteer submitted to being bitten by naturally infected ticks. All of these men fell ill with the fever and, with the evidence provided by animal experimentation, this is considered conclusive proof that the human tick is the carrier of the germ of relapsing fever.

who is directly in charge of this pure-bred, aristocratic herd, headed by Orange King Segus Pontiac, gives them more conscientious consideration than is generally given to royalty in these days of "contemptuous" democracy.

The Future of the Hospital

The high ideals of the personnel of the county hospital's organization are modestly shown but very impressive. These ideals are so strongly established and so completely recognized and honored, as to preclude the necessity of any extraordinary defense against the mischievous political corruptionists, whose baneful work has menaced and sometimes ruined similar institutions. However, the potential significance of this beneficent institution to the whole community is clearly shown against any initial hampering forces.

Conclusion

It is not given to us to know what wonderful things are weaving in the loom of the future—we do not know what marvelous achievements may come to these of living beings. Among these we do not have to possess the gift of prophecy to foretell that the great minds charged with the expansion and development of Orange County Hospital and similar institutions, discover and establish many new things which will help brush many more tears of sorrow, suffering and pain from afflicted humanity and cause the whole world to burst into blossom from sheer joy!

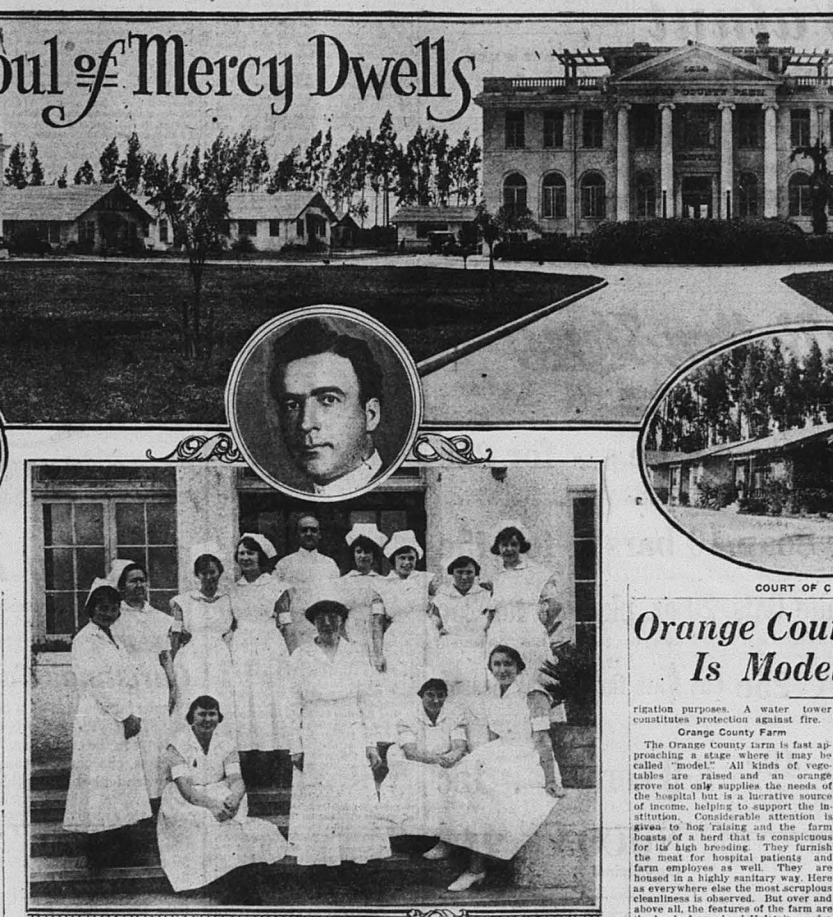

Disease of Metals

Some authorities hold that metals suffer from contractions diseases analogous to those of living beings. Among these so-called diseases one of the most striking is that called "tin pest," which is a block or plate of tin, attacked by this malarial, crumbly and falls into dust, and sometimes watery protuberances appear on the surface of the metal. Various other metals, which have been hardened by plastic strain, suffer from a spontaneity which manifests itself by a spontaneous recrystallization. The most remarkable cases occur with lead and lead-drawn brass. These troubles are not due, as has been thought, simply to moisture. Temperature plays a great part in producing them. The most singular fact, perhaps, is that "tin pest" is capable of spreading by contagion.

Risked Their Lives

By human experimentation the human tick has been proved to be the carrier of the disease relapsing fever in Panama, according to information received in Washington. Three human volunteers, who had been infected with the fever after tests on white rats and monkeys had indicated that the ticks carried the disease, were injected with blood from one animal to another.

In the experiments conducted by Lewis H. Bates, Lawrence D. Dunn and Joe H. St. John of the board of health laboratory and Ancon hospital, in the Canal Zone, one volunteer had injected beneath his skin some blood from a white rat infected with relapsing fever. Into another the patients was injected hypodermically a suspension of naturally infected ticks. While the other volunteer submitted to being bitten by naturally infected ticks. All of these men fell ill with the fever and, with the evidence provided by animal experimentation, this is considered conclusive proof that the human tick is the carrier of the germ of relapsing fever.

GIRL IS EXPELLED VILLAGE IS RENT BY LIPSTICK WAR

The village of Knobel, Ark., of 500 population, is divided into two hostile camps, the lipstick and the antilipstick camps, and the knowing ones say that out of this case will arise conditions as described by Will Camp, a local poet, where he said:

"Deadly feuds were thus engendered. Family friendships rent in twain: Women never hallowed sugar.

From each other's houses again. For in Knobel there has appeared a girl who intends to hold up the 'rights of every woman to use all reasonable means within her reach to look her best'."

This girl is Miss Pearl Pugsley, 18, who was expelled from the public school at Knobel Sept. 23 because she wore face powder, which was against the rule adopted by the school board of the town. She intends to go to the limit to ascertain if a woman has not the right to use face powder and cosmetics if she desires to do so, and has brought suit against the board of education this afternoon for expelling her because she sought to use "beautifiers."

R. A. Scott, J. R. McCoy and F. J. Selmeier are the members of the board of education of the little town, who decided to make the ruling, which appeared something as follows: "The wearing of transparent hose, low neck dresses or any kind of clothing denoting toward immodesty; the use of paint, lipstick and all cosmetics are hereby prohibited."

Considered it invasion of Rights

This rule was enforced by Principal N. E. Hicks, and along with Miss Pugsley two other girls were dismissed, she says.

"I had no face powder at home, and as a substitute I used ordinary talcum powder that day," she said. "Professor Hicks told me to go and wash it off if I desired to remain in school, but I refused for the reason I believed the board had no right whatever to adopt or enforce any such rules; that it was an invasion of my rights as well as of any other girl's rights, and that I considered it as much my duty to resist unlawful rule as to obey the lawful one."

Then she was expelled. The next day her father, a prosperous merchant of Knobel, brought action against the board in court and asked an injunction which he desired to make the ruling, which appeared something as follows: "The wearing of transparent hose, low neck dresses or any kind of clothing denoting toward immodesty; the use of paint, lipstick and all cosmetics are hereby prohibited."

Miss Pugsley contends that the constitution of the state of Arkansas provides free tuition for persons of her age, and that she can only be expelled under the laws of the state for gross immorality, refractory conduct or insubordination. She is asking for a writ of mandamus against the school board permitting her to again re-enter the public schools so that her education may not be impaired.

Her case will come up before Judge Marion Futrell in the Clay county, Arkansas, circuit court Nov. 26 and the entire state is looking forward to the outcome of the first case of the kind that has ever appeared in court in this state.

BALKAN KING KNEW HOW TO GET GEMS

John Stewart, Bryan, editor of the Richmond News-Leader, told a story at Washington recently, illustrating the feeling character of human greatness.

"A man I heard of," he said, "came in close contact with the ruler of one of the Balkan states, who started out to buy a pair of gloves, the price of which was $10.50. He lacked the odd half dollar and the man advanced it. A short time later—maybe not as a result of the loan, but just because—the man was the fourth class order of something or other by the king. When he got home he was pleased, of course, so he took the order out and had it encircled in diamonds. In course of time he was back at the Balkan court of his friend, the king, and he naturally wore the order when he entered the presence. The king examined it carefully and then a pained expression came over his face.

"What," he cried, "only the fourth class order? I meant, of course, to give you a first class."

"So he took the diamond studded bauble and put it in his pocket and handed over his friend the topnotch decoration."

If it wasn't for the happening of the unexpected life would be terribly monotonous.

Between Ourselves

By Della M. Stewart

A certain woman has recently become the possessor of a wonderful sable coat which cost $60,000. That's most as much as you and I spent on our winter wrap, isn't it?

Yet, when we think of it, $60,000 was but a small part of the cost of the garment. Many of us would like to count the real cost of any thing. Many a graduate of high mathematics falls here.

But we can sometimes approximate. First, the $60,000 coat cost the lives of over 100 sables, and three years' work of several collectors. It cost painstaking labor of selection of manufacture. Now that it has an owner, it will cost much to live up to its possession. One cannot don a $60,000 coat with a shabby gown or worn shoes. It will be worn at the cost of envy on the part of many, of the chance of pilfering by the lighting.

But it will gratify a certain pride of possession and, it may be, the spirit of liking to outshine associates. No doubt it will add distinction to the costume of the wearer. There's surely no crime in the possession of a $60,000 coat. It would like to revel on the richness of a like one—if we could.

But that's no reason for feeling as if fate had dealt the wrong hand to us, since we can't. The $60,000 coat will keep the owner warm and comfortable. It's a $60,000 coat. Any one, with money unlimited, can select clothing of harmonious richness. But let's much more credit due the one who makes few dollars do the work of many, while so doing holds fast the spirit of contentment?

There's no reason for despair, then, if $60,000 coats be not ours.

Have a Smile

A young English grocer with social aspirations joined an exclusive golf club and was enrolled as "Horatio Dash-Bank, Esq., tea merchant."

In due course he presented himself, faultlessly equipped, and secured the services of a veteran caddy.

The latter was dubious from the outset, but when at the first vigorous onslaught a peppering of Mother Earth was sent into his eyes and stinging mouth, he cried in disgust: "Say, mister, at golf the tee doesn't go into the caddy!"

Bill, the boy battler of Bermondsey, got in the way of one of those little two-seaters known in this country as taxis. His thirteen stone caught the full impact of the tiny car and Bill took the count. When he came around he looked for the cause of the trouble. "Not did that," he asked. "My car," said the owner. "Your worst," said Bill, with deep disgust. "Lammer! Fancy me—being knocked out wiv a roller skate!"—TIT-Bits.

To illustrate her point the teacher drew on the blackboard a picture of a small boy sitting on the bank of a stream, fishing.

"You see this boy," she said, beaming on her pupils. "He must have patience."

For a little while longer she dilated on the beauties of being patient. Then came the time for her to test her scholars.

"Now, can any of you boys tell me what we need most when we go fishing?" she inquired.

Like one voice came a chorus from the class—

"Worms!"

"I don't believe you know what a bachelor is," said Rose's governess. "He's been amused at her pupil's use of the word in an English composition."

Yes, I do," said Rose. "A bachelor is a very happy man."

"How do you know that?" inquired the governess.

"Father told me," said Rose.

CHATTERER GETS ANOTHER SURPRISE

CHATTERER the Red Squirrel had never had so many surprises—good surprises—in all his life as since the day he had been caught in a trap in Farmer Brown's corn crib. In the first place, it had been a great surprise to him that he had not been given to Black Pussy the Cat, as he had fully expected to be. Then had the even greater surprise of finding that Farmer Brown's boy was ever and ever so much nicer than he had thought. A later surprise had been the wire wheel in his cage, so that he could run to his heart's content. It was been too much for Chatterer, and such a great longing for the Green Forest and the Old Orchard filled his heart, he could think of nothing else. He just sat in a corner of his cage and looked as miserable as he felt. He lost his appetite. In vain Farmer Brown's boy brought him the fattest nuts and other dainties. He just couldn't eat for the great longing for freedom that filled his heart until it seemed ready to burst. He no longer cared to run to the wire wheel which had given him so much pleasure at first. He was homesick, and he just couldn't help it.

Like a Little Red Flash He Was Out-side.

such a pleasant and wholly unexpected surprise it had quite changed Chatterer's feelings toward Farmer Brown's boy.

The fact is, Chatterer could have been truly happy but for one thing—he was a prisoner. Yes, sir, he was a prisoner, and he couldn't forget it for one minute while he was awake. He used to watch Farmer Brown's boy and wish with all his might that he could make him understand how dreadful it was to be in prison. But Farmer Brown's boy couldn't understand what Chatterer said, no matter how hard Chatterer tried to make him. He seemed to think that Chatterer was happy. He just didn't understand that not all the good things in the world could make up for loss of freedom—that it is better to be free, though hungry and cold, than in a prison with every comfort.

Chatterer had stood it pretty well and made the best of things until Sammy Jay had found him, and Reddy Fox had made fun of him and Peter Rabbit had teased at him from behind the old stone wall. The very sight of them going where they pleased and when they pleased had been too much for Chatterer, and such a great longing for the Green Forest and the Old Orchard filled his heart, he could think of nothing else. He just sat in a corner of his cage and looked as miserable as he felt. He lost his appetite. In vain Farmer Brown's boy brought him the fattest nuts and other dainties. He just couldn't eat for the great longing for freedom that filled his heart until it seemed ready to burst. He no longer cared to run to the wire wheel which had given him so much pleasure at first. He was homesick, and he just couldn't help it.

Chatterer was so excited he didn't know what to do. He raced around the cage. Then he jumped into the wire wheel and made it spin round and round as never before. When he was too tired to run any more he jumped out. And right then he discovered something he hadn't noticed before. The little door in the top of his cage was open! It must be that Farmer Brown's boy had forgotten to close it when he put in Chatterer's breakfast. Chatterer forgot that he was tired. Like a little red flash he was outside and whisking along the snow-covered stone wall straight for his home in the Old Orchard.

"Chickaree! Chickaree! Chickaree!" he shouted as he ran.

"Ha, ha, ha! Go it, you little red scamp!" shouted a voice behind him. Then Chatterer knew that Farmer Brown's boy had not left the little door open by mistake, but had given him his freedom, and right then he knew that they were going to be the best of friends.

Next Story, Chatterer Listens to the Small Voice.
