NAPOLEON AT ELBA.

The Extravagance That Characterized His Manner of Living.

The scene of Napoleon's landing at Porto Ferrajo was a curious one. He had taken the municipality by surprise, so that the proposed decorations and triumphal arch were incomplete. Eighty years ago sterling had been voted for these preparations, and the council had also decreed that 240 should be expended in the purchase of articles of furniture for the palace which was not apart for him. But, if their means were small, the Elbans' hearts were warm. Napoleon was met on the mole by the mayor and corporation, the vicario and other clergy.

The people crowded around the hero, and waved hunting from their windows. The boys of the city were offered to him in a silver dish by the mayor. He did but touch them with his fingers. His troops then entered him through the little piazza of white houses with green jalousies, now known as Piazza Cavour, into the adjacent piazza (Vittorio Emanuele), by one side of which is the plain little cathedral of the city. Here a Te Deum was sung with enthusiasm. Napoleon stood throughout the function with best knee and a far away look. He was afterward presented with a map of the island. Then he lunched, mounted his white horse Tiberlin, and rode out of the battlemented hill-town to see something of the realms of his great empire. The vicario's vision of the opulence that was to come upon Elba with the emperor was illusive. The revenue of the island, all told, was only 387,000f. Of this, as soon as the figures were before him, Napoleon devoted 200,000f. to public works, such as roads and publications. The balance was little enough for the maintenance of a court and the several hundred soldiers of the Old Guard who had followed him into exile.

By the treaty of Fontainebleau, an annual allowance of 2,000,000 francs was allowed to him. But he received not a franc of this, and had he not carried with him a sum of 3,400,000 francs he would have been at the mercy of the Elbans for the means of existence. As it was, he did not eke out his funds very judiciously. Had his mother kept the keg the Elba establishment might have held out for two or three years instead of less than one year, and Waterloo been postponed. During the first few months he seldom passed a child or a peasant in the road without a brief inquisitorial chat, which ended in the gift of a couple of gold pieces. He gave ragged boys money to buy clothing, and lit the gilt cupidons at the arches for flowers. Such lavishness could not last. Retrenchment had to be the order of the day. Thus, at length, the worthy, unscathed Elbans found such burdens of taxes laid upon them as they had never dreamed of. As Capoleverl, indeed, there was a revolt. The people intrenched themselves in their villages and took up stones of resistance against the tax collector. "So Capoliveri wants to make war with me?" exclaimed Napoleon, with a brisk air, when he learned of this. But, upon reflection, Capoliveri yielded to the bidding of the victor of Marengo.—The Cornhill Magazine.

He Courted the Old Ladies.

When Dr. Finsch landed in Astrolabe bay, New Guinea, a while ago, he went with an escort of sailors a short distance inland, where he found buried in the forest a large village. The party was accompanied by some of the village men whose acquaintance they had cultivated at the shore. The women, however, were none the less frightened at the strange appearance of the visitors, and most of them ran off into the woods. A few old women, however, who had been brave enough to face the strangers, were rewarded with presents, and through their efforts the other women were soon induced to return.

Dr. Finsch says that throughout his explorations he took particular pains to ingratiate himself with the old women. He often found that they wielded important influence, and their good will was very helpful. He admits that he did not always find it a particularly agreeable task to win the favor of the older women, for they are not fair to look upon. But it was to his interest to have all the old ladies on his side, and so he put his lips most fervently to make them think he was a very nice sort of a fellow.

Dr. Finsch advances one rather novel idea about the women in uncivilized tribes in tropical countries. He reports the well known fact that these women lose their youth and freshness while still young, but he adds that they would not seem to do so so early in life if they were clothing and understood the arts of the toilet, with which women in other lands by using them to conceal advancing years and artfully supply the charms they have lost. —New York Sun.

The American Girl.

The American girl is gradually invading every department of operatic representation, and always with success. For years past more leading prima donnas have been professed by the United States than by any European country. Miss Patti is almost an American; Mme. Albani is a Canadian; Mme. Nevada, Mme. Gerster, Miss Hersee, Miss Hayden and Miss Van Zandt, with many more whose names will at once suggest themselves, are all from the United States. Miss Geraldine Ulmer, an American, is one of the most attractive members of the Savoy company, and Miss Huntington, another American, reigns supreme at the Prince of Wales'. We must hear of a new American Juliet, Miss Ramee, who, coming after Miss Patti at the Paris Opera house, has almost equaled Miss Patti's success as Juliet. Miss Eleanor, Mlle. Fliot, who has made her mark in the grand ballets of Mme. and of Rosita Mauri, was certainly acknowledged as rather more than fifty years ago, he wrote that American was the finest country in the world, but one to which Italian music could never appeal.—St. Jerome's Gazette.

A Vicious Cat.

Charles Stiles, of Newark, N. J., had an encounter with a cat that he will not soon forget. He was walking between two piles of lumber in the street when his attention was attracted by an ugly growl. He looked and saw the form in one pile of lumber crouching for a leap from beneath the boards and directed its teeth to the end of his leg. His first impulse was to run, but he knew that the cat was armed with claws, and that the risk of having his hands bitten, he decided to remain and fight it out. He grabbed a piece of board and waited for the cat to spring. It did so, and he struck it a blow that knocked it to the ground. Then the fight began in earnest. The cat fought like a demon, and Stiles found that he had his hands full to keep it off. He succeeded in doing so, however, and finally killed the animal. Stiles' pants were torn to shreds.

AGRICULTURAL NOTES.

Chief Hog-Hunter.

W. W. Motheral of Hanford, Tulare county, Commissioner of the State Board of Horticulture for the San Joaquin district, and who has just been appointed State Entomologist, left San Francisco last week for his home. After a short stay at his residence he will at once commence a tour of the State on business connected with his office, having received his instruction from the Executive Committee of the State Board of Horticulture. The power was given the Board to appoint such an officer by Legislature. Such an office has never been before established, although a similar inspector of fruit pests, was held for some years by Professor W. G. Kies of Berkeley. Shortly after the Legislature created the office, the State Board of Horticulture at its meeting in National City on April 15th last passed the following resolution relative to the new officer:

Resolved, That the Entomologist of this Board shall hold office during the pleasure of the Board, and his duties shall be as follows: To examine into the disease infesting fruit, fruit trees or vines, and make experiments thereon; to make a thorough study of the insects that are injurious to fruit, fruit trees or vines, and of insects beneficial or otherwise, and to discover and suggest methods for the extermination of injurious insect pests and diseases. To cause such research and study of subjects pertaining thereto, as the interests and general welfare of the State may demand, and to disseminate the results thereof in bulletins, to be printed and circulated from time to time, as occasion may require, and to make practical illustrations of the work thereof. He shall report monthly and be in the field always and shall give his entire time to the State, and shall perform such other duties as may be required of him by the Board and by the Executive Committee. He shall be paid for his service as said Entomologist the sum of $150 per month, to be audited by the Chairman of the Finance Committee at the end of each month.

The new appointee, Mr. Motheral, is a prominent fruit-grower in the San Joaquin district, and a man of considerable wealth. He is a native of Tennessee, and for many years was a minister of the Gospel, being a Presbyterian. He came to California about 1870 and located in the San Joaquin district, and is one of the famous Mussel-Slough settlers. Before his arrival in California he was largely interested in agricultural pursuits and gave considerable attention to the subject. He received a college education and also entered into a scientific course of study in connection with horticultural affairs. He was appointed by Governor Waterman in December last as a member of the State Board of Horticulture. Since his connection with the Board he has been a zealous worker, and his appointment to the position now held by him is generally satisfactory to fruit-growers.

In reply to questions regarding Mr. Motheral's ability for the position, a prominent fruit-grower recently said: "Since the Legislature passed the bill providing for the appointment of a State Entomologist the question has been one of importance to all of the fruit growers of the State. Considerable work of every effective nature can be accomplished by an efficient officer. I consider the appointment of Mr. Motheral a splendid one and that the Board made a wise selection. It is true that there is a salary attached to it, but I am positive in the belief that were the salary only half what it is, the labors of Mr. Motheral would be just the same. The salary of the office will be a secondary consideration, and what his work will amount to we will soon learn. The State Board has just an excellent member and of course there is now a vacancy in the Board which must be filled by the Governor, but just when a person will be appointed I am unable to state. Who do I think it will be? That I cannot say positively, but as the vacancy is in the San Joaquin district comprising the counties of Kern, Tulare and Fresno, I would not be surprised to see an aspirant from each place, but the vacancy has only been made such a short while that names have not as yet been submitted."

Other fruit-growers expressed satisfaction at the selection made by the State Board, and believed that the selected officer was a competent man.

The salary of the State Entomologist is paid from the money that is allowed by the State for the maintenance of the State Board of Horticulture, and the term of office is regulated by the Board.

The resignation of Mr. Motheral has not yet been received by the Board but probably within a few days, when Governor Waterman will be notified of the vacancy.—Bulletin.

A Novel Point.

A point in relation to water rights has recently been brought up and settled in Colorado, which so far as known is without parallel in California. The irrigation canals in that State are almost entirely owned by companies, which sell the water to consumers at a certain rate per inch. A farmer under one of these canals had been accustomed to purchase regularly 100 inches of water. Subsequently another canal was taken out above, and a portion of the supply diverted into it. The farmer objected that 100 inches demanded that he still be furnished with the full amount, regardless of the fact that if the ditch company supplied it to him some other consumer would have to suffer, since there was no surplus whatever above the demand of those living below the first canal.

Upon the refusal of the company to continues to supply the full 100 inches for an indefinate period, the consumer brought suit to enforce his demands. He brought his suit upon what might be called an adaptation of the doctrine of prior appropriation. That is, having been one of the first to purchase water when the canal was constructed, and having always used 100 inches, the consumer maintained that he had thereby acquired a prescriptive right to that amount of water, regardless of the needs of other consumers.

The company claimed, on the other hand, that as they had been deprived of a portion of their water by no act of their own the proper method to pursue was to apportion the remaining water among consumers in proportion to the amount theretofore used. Thus, as the flow had been diminished 25 per cent, the consumer of 100 inches would have to be content with 75 in the future, and so on in the same proportion. All would thus suffer to a certain extent, but the loss would be apportioned among all the consumers instead of being made to fall upon one or two so heavily as to produce complete ruin.

Upon the first trial of the case the principle in doctrine was upheld, but subsequently upon further examination this was reversed and the company was directed to apportion the water pro rata among the consumers in proportion to the amount ordinarily used by each. This decision is certainly in line with common sense and will furnish a precedent for legislation in California when the supply of water for irrigation shall have become so limited as to render it necessary to regulate its apportionment by law.

A Mysterious Cattle Disease.

Cattle on the ranch of D. Burris, in Examiner district, have been dying off rapidly during the past week, over seventy-five head having already died. The head of cattle is small and were formerly in a field in which the water was bad, and although a few have been allowed to be driven to the creek, it is believed to be the cause of the trouble. Dr. Mastin, who has been called, and who has made a post mortem examination of one of the animals, says that the mortality is due to the almost total amount which the animals have drunk and eat to any infectious disease. A few years ago Mr. Sanborn of Mussel Slough lost about forty head in the same way. They die suddenly and apparently without any previous illness. A Bakersfield man who is hauling barley, with the result that he saved all the cuttle to which it was given: "Add sacramento and salt in the proportion of one ounce of saltpetre to a pound of salt, to water in a trough; put in enough of the mixture so that each animal will take at least a tablespoonful of saltpetre each day. The cattle, when the remedy is being given, should be kept in a corral, fed on dry feed and allowed to drink no water save that which has been medicated. The same remedy is said to be good for cattle having diarrhœa. D. C. Hayward has used the remedy on his cattle when they were suffering from the effects of alkali water, and found it a sure thing, and it will prevent the death of animals from being caused if applied soon enough. It is a strange fact that cattle will drink warm alkali water in preference to clear, pure water until a cure can be effected.—Tracer Advocate.

Remodeling Naples.

LONDON, July 2.—The city of Naples, in Italy, began housecleaning to-day on a scale never before paralleled in the history of municipalities in any part of the globe. The plans contemplate the demolition of 17,000 houses and sixty-two churches in the most thickly settled and most squalid parts of the city, where narrow streets filled with pestilential filth breed pestilence and death. It is proposed to erect instead well-built houses and to lay out fine, broad streets that will let in air and sunshine to the inhabitants. Naples is the most thickly populated city in Europe, and the quarter to be thus renovated contains now a population of 105,000 or 500 to the acre. It is proposed to reduce this population just one half. All people now residing in these slums have received notice to quit, and when the work has been completed the new building will have an entirely new set of occupants.

A new street, a mile and a half long and ninety feet wide, twice the width of any existing street in Naples, is to be run through the district, now temporarily depopulated. The cost of this immense improvement will be enormous, and is to be borne largely by the Italian Government. The work to be done involves the destruction of 144 old streets and the widening of 127 others, total or partial destruction of 56 fondaci or slums and of 927 isolated groups of houses.

The payment which will have to be made to the owners of houses to be torn down for their appraised value will alone amount to £2,750,000. Add to this the cost of the work of demolition and of the new streets and squares to be laid out and it will be seen that this is the most expensive piece of house-cleaning undertaken.

Although the public inauguration of this great enterprise took place over a week ago, when King Humbert and his son, the Prince of Naples, went from Rome to take part in the ceremonies attending it, the real work only began to-day, when nearly 12,000 laborers were set to work tearing down the filthy old rookeries in the doomed quarter. This improvement, it is expected, will take four years to be complete, but when finished it will make the city one of the most desirable from a sanitary view in Europe, instead of what it now is—the very worst. These improvements have been in contemplation ever since the great cholera epidemic of 1884, which so thoroughly demonstrated their necessity; but it was not until two months ago that the Italian Parliament passed a bill authorizing the work.

For three months M. Henri De Lisle has been making a study of the grape vine disease in the vineyards in Southern California. He is one of the best viticulturists experts in Southern France, and came to this region after repeated requests from the vine growers. M. De Lisle says that the strange vine disease is akin to mal nero, which killed over 20,000 acres of vineyard land in France in 1856, and has since reappeared there. The disease, he claims, is of fungus growth. M. De Lisle finds that the only cure for it is to spray the vine with a preparation of blue-stone, lime and water. People in the Pomona valley who have used the same preparation have almost succeeded in stamping out the vine disease, and are growing very large crops of grapes. M. De Lisle is at present on a tour of inspection of vineyards in Tulare, Kern and Fresno counties. He has been invited to give the results of his inspection to Agricultural Department at Washington.

Major J. B. Lauck, Traveling Passenger Agent of the Southern Pacific Company, who for the past few months has been traveling with the California exhibit in the East, returned to San Francisco Monday. Referring to the benefits to be derived from the exhibit of "California on wheels," the Major said: "It is almost impossible to clearly understand the great benefit the State will derive from this traveling exhibit. It is certainly the most comprehensive plan of advertising the varied resources of our State that could be devised. As soon as the cars reach a town they are surrounded by hundreds of people, even before the exhibit is detached from the train. The interest in our section is phenomenal, and the exhibit is doing much to awaken interest in the Golden State. One of the wonders of this exhibit will be a large increase in the area of California fruit, and in a year I do not think our State can supply the demand. All through the raisin districts our wines and fruits are practically unknown, but wherever the goods once obtain a foothold the market will be unlimited."

An exchange publishes a report from bee ranches on the mountain sides through Los Angeles, San Bernardino and San Diego counties. It is found that even less than one seventh of the average honey supply will be taken in this region this year. Several bee ranches which usually have 100,000 pounds of honey each year, will not save 70,000 pounds this year, and several have given up the honey business for this season. The cause of the trouble was too early blossoming of flowers.

The County Poor Farm.

E. L. Burdick, superintendent of the County Poor Farm, made the following report from Jans to the Supervisors Monday: Number of patients at farm June 1st, 58; admitted during the month, 8, discharged, 16; treated, 12; pay roll, $310; medical supplies, $11.30; groceries, $107.97; butter, etc., $17.20; breadstuffs, 121.75; vegetables and fruit, $42.35; fuel and lights, $2.25; clothing, $62.02; furniture, $1.85; sundries, $142.28.

The Hostetter Stomach Bitter People Score Another Point.

In the United States Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York, Judge Shipman handed down an opinion a few days ago in the suit of the owners of the trade mark covering Hostetter's Stomach Bitters against Arnold Theller and Cornell Theller, the compounders on Vesey street, New York City, in which it was decided that, although the defendants made use of their own names on the labels affixed to the bottles containing bitters prepared by them, yet as they were evidently designed to imitate Hostetter labels, they were infringers, and a perpetual injunction was granted and an accounting of damages ordered, together with the costs of the suit. It is the evident intention of the Hostetter people to protect their valuable trade mark against all infringers. 1y4-1m*

"I AM MOLTKE."

Current Story of the Early Life of This Great General.

On a summer afternoon, almost fifty years ago, Sulejmann Pasha, Commander-in-Chief of the Egyptian artillery, sat at coffee in a cafe on the Nile terrace at Cairo, writes a correspondent of the New York Sun. At tables near him were many soldiers who had helped him fight the armies of Sultan Mahmud not many months before. Several of them had been with him in the battle of Nisib when he routed the Turkish army under Hafiz Pasha and (Colonel von Moltke, then in the Sultan's service. But Sulejmann Pasha was not thinking of the soldiers about him, nor of Hafiz Pasha, nor Colonel von Moltke, nor the great battle of Nisib. His whole attention was concentrated on a chessboard before him.

Sulejmann Pasha was a famous chess-player. In the first few weeks after his return to Cairo he had beaten Osmon of Ulema Reschid Aga, formerly the champion chess-player of Northern Egypt. He regarded his reputation as a chess-player as somewhat akin to his reputation as a warrior. He considered chess to be pre-eminently a soldier's game, and never tired of making elaborate comparisons between strategy on the chess board and strategy on the field of battle. Every afternoon he met Ulema Reschid Aga at the cafe on the Nile terrace and had two or three games.

On this particular afternoon, almost fifty years ago, Ulema Reschid Aga was a little late in coming to his Waterloo, and Sulejmann Pasha was having a preliminary skirmish with himself while awaiting his opponent's arrival. His dragoon was interrupted by the appearance on the terrace of a long, gaunt, boxy young stranger. The stranger strode right up to the Pasha's table, and after making a half-military salute, said so loudly that every one on the terrace could hear:

"Pasha, I challenge you to a game of chess."

All the officers of the terrace sat quite still and stared at the thin, pale young man who stood before his chief great commander. The Pasha looked him over curiously.

"I am at your service," was his answer, after a long pause. "How high do you usually play?"

"Sometimes for nothing, sometimes for a great deal. You fix the stakes, Pasha."

"Well, a hundred ducats will not be too much."

The stranger nodded and sat down. The lots were cast.

All the officers in the cafe left their coffee to crowd around the players. The first few moves convinced them that the long, bony fingers of the stranger had the chess game many times before. At the end of twenty minutes the Pasha's eyes suddenly brightened and he smiled. He had an invincible combination. He placed his queen before his opponent's queen. The officers began to grumble, for they thought their commander had lost his head. Only Ulenchid Aga, who in the meantime had joined the party of spectators, looked happy. He had guessed his friend's combination, and he, too, was invincible.

"He will take the queen," commented the spectators, anxiously.

"Then he will be checkmated in eight moves," whispered back Reschid Aga.

"And if he doesn't take her?"

"He will lose his own," said the ex-champion, triumphantly.

The stranger move a pawn.

The officers thought it was all up with the gaunt young man and started back to their coffee; they were called back, however, by the first words the Pasha's opponent had spoken since he sat down to the table.

"Pasha, in twelve moves you will be checkmated."

The interest of the Pasha's friends became intense. They counted each move aloud. One—two—three—four—and the Pasha was already had pressed. Five—six—seven—eight—nine—and his men were hemmed in on all sides. Ten—the Pasha tried in vain to break the blockade by sacrificing his queen. Eleven—he drew back his king in a corner. Twelve—and the stranger cried out: "Checkmate."

There was a dead silence, and all stared at the Pasha. He thought hard for several minutes without uttering a word. Then he looked searchingly into the stranger's face and said:

"Those before I have seen chess played as you play it. Your strategy is not new to me, although I cannot cope with it. The game that you are playing reminds me of a much larger game than that was played with cavalry and infantry and heavy artillery, till the ground shook under our feet. The great chess-player from the North who was then against me had 150,000 men. In his hands they were invincible. The mad and envious interference of Hafiz Pasha ruined his combinations, however, and gave us the game."

The Pasha stopped a moment to scrutinize the stranger's face. It was expressionless. Then he continued:

"Young man, you remind me of that great chess-player from the North who all but ruined us at Nisib, as you have ruined me here. Young man, only one man in the world can play chess like that. He is Colonel von Moltke."

"You have it," answered the stranger, reaching the Pasha his hand. "I am Moltke."

Chester's Mad Penmanship.

The most celebrated exponent of bad penmanship in America was Hetis Chester, whose signature has been aptly compared to "a gridiron struck by lightning," and whose handwriting was, in many cases, absolutely undecipherable, even by the writer himself. On one occasion Mr. Choate was having his house repaired and made arrangements to have a carved mantel put up, promising to send the model. Failing to obtain one to suit him he wrote to his workman to that effect. The carpenter, after studying the missive—which looked as if a spider walking in ink had crawled across the paper—at length concluded that it must be the desired plan and forthwith began fashioning probably the most original mantelpiece that ever ornamented a room. This story is almost equal to that told of the great Napoleon, who was such a wretched writer that in his youth his mother, from Germany to Josephine were at first taken for rough maps of the seat of war.

It is related of the late Dean Stanley that a short time before his death he was invited by the editor of one of the New York magazines to contribute an article to its pages on some timely topic. The paper was promptly written and duly received, but, to the consternation of the editor no one was able to decipher the hard writing. Finally, in despair, the editor was obliged to return the manuscript to England to be rewritten for publication. In both the good Dean, like Choate, did not write, but merely made a few arbitrary strokes with a pen on paper. No mention of remarkable penmen would be complete which did not include the name of Horace Greely, whose chirography was once tersely described by a new compositor in the Tribune office in his savage comment, liberally interspersed with profanity: "If Belshazzar had seen this writing on the wall he would have been more terrified than he was."

Henry Rachel, Charles Ivanhoe, Editors and Proprietors.

THURSDAY JULY 11, 1889

THE editor of the GAZETTE is absent this week at the editorial convention at the Coronado Hotel where the second meeting of the editors of Southern California, accompanied by their wives, daughters and sweethearts, is now being held. This issue will consequently be better than usual.

Two decisions affecting the rights of riparian owners and appropriators were handed down by the Supreme Court last week. One was in the case of Schick vs. Peregoy & Hyer, where it appear that Schick owned land bordering on a stream, but went above his property, on government land, and made a dam and, by ditches, directed all the water to his own land. Subsequently the defendants acquired title to the government land, and they built a dam and took all the water. Schick sued to quiet title to the full flow of the stream down to his ditch, on the ground that the defendants' claim was subsequent to his. He won the case in the lower court and the Supreme Court affirmed the decision. The other case was that of McKissick vs. Peregoy, on appeal from a judgment enjoining the defendant from interfering with a head dam, by means of which McKissick diverts water which flows, when in its natural course, through Peregoy's lands. The lower court found for the plaintiff, but the Supreme Court revers d the decision.

It is said that the height of the Bear valley dam in Southern California is to be increased thirty feet in order to impound more water and irrigate a greater extent of country. This is a commendable purpose if well carried out. But it is hardly necessary to remind those in charge that we want no Johnstown disasters in California. The Bear valley dam is a very different piece of work from the mud heap on the Conemaugh. It is a well built masonry wall, arched to resist the pressure of the water. Nevertheless, raising a dam is a risky process. It creates a pressure on the lower parts of the structure which they were not designed to stand, and unless the patching be very scientifically done there is likely to be trouble. Hydraulic engineering is likely to be an exceedingly important profession in California hereafter. We are only at the beginning of the development of irrigation. Every foothill valley through which a stream trickles to the sands will be dammed and made by art the development of the state. Any every dam will be a possible source of danger to the increasing population that will be massed below it.

Frank S. Johnson, of the Johnson Lucky Mercantile Company, successors to W. T. Coleman & Company, who has just returned from the East says: "Our raisins have almost driven the Spanish article out of the market. There is now no question as to their keeping quality, and the producers are in a position to point by their crop reports to the growers all over the State, with maximum the grade and style of packing that prevails in Fresno, it will only be a question of two or three years before the European market will be at their command. I saw, in New York, raisins from California two years old that looked better than the Malaga raisins at six months old."

NANSEN has had a hard trip, and it is reported that his hair has turned snow white. But he will soon out of the African jungles with a well earned reputation for hanging here. But few men could have borne the privations which Stanley has endured, and but few there are who would not have turned back. Had Stanley been a soldier he would have achieved a proud name, but he knows no such word as fail.

As Orange grower of Alhambra is positives that the Australian ladybug is killing all the white scale in his orchard. He thinks by October his trees will be free from the pest.

Dr. Cogswell of Pasadena claims to have found an enemy of the red scale, of which he says. It appears also that the so called laced winged fly is a deadly enemy of the aspidiotus citri (red scale) and have already made a vigorous attack upon them in many places. This little, slim, willowy, active creature has been noticed for some time, and is undoubtedly a native, and from all appearances will prove as effective an exterminator of the insect scale as our ten thousand of a grosser habit, will of the white. Now, that this may be accomplished, spraying of our trees must cease at once. The parasite is as rapidly destroyed by the various sprays as the scale itself, and quite likely they are more easily killed than the scale, for it is an undeniable fact that the trees that have been most often and most thoroughly sprayed are infested the worst to-day, and also manifest a growth diminished in vitality. This is a point observed with those who have had an experience sufficient to form one. With this data before us, then, it seems to suspend, for the present at least, all methods of spraying and washing, that these natural enemies may have a fair chance to accomplish what we have all utterly failed to, saving but only a heavy cash expense, as well as much valuable time.

The Editorial Convention.

The convention of the Editorial Association of Southern California is now in session at the Coronado Hotel. The meeting is the second which the fraternity have held, and from all reports the editors are having a great time. The special train bearing them to San Diego passed here at 4:50 on Monday evening, having on board over one hundred editors, many of whom had with them their wives. They arrived at San Diego at 10 P. M. The hour being late, the visitors proceeded across the bay to the Hotel del Coronado, and sought accommodations for supper, etc. Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock, the editors, accompanied by the local Reception Committee, left the Hotel del Coronado by the bob line railroad around the bay, connecting with the National City and Otay railroad at National City, thence over the latter line to Otay, Oneonta, Tia Juana, Sweetwater and the other points of interest. A lunch was spread for the guests by the citizens of National City. The excursionists returned to the hotel via San Diego. In the evening an address of welcome was delivered by Mayor Gunn in the theater room of the hotel, after which the business and literary programmes of the association took place. Music will be interspersed by the hotel orchestra.

Yesterday the editors and Reception Committee met at the Santa Fe wharf at 9:30, and boarded the steamer Manuel Dublan for a trip around the bay and outside Point Loma as far as the whistling buoy. The excursionists were accompanied by the City Guard band. After lunch at the Hotel del Coronado, the visitors went to San Diego in a body, and visited the Chamber of Commerce rooms, for which a special display of fruit and other products was provided. They then scattered and visited various parts of the city. The usual literary programme was given in the evening at the big hotel.

To-day will be devoted to an excursion over the Cuyamaca road to El Cajon valley and Lakeside, leaving from the foot of Fifth street at 9:45 A. M. The great theme will be inspected as well as some of the fine ranches in that locality. The excursionists will return in good season to participate in the literary exercises of the evening.

Bakersfield was almost entirely destroyed by fire on Sunday. The loss will aggregate a million and a quarter of dollars.

Many of the farmers on the mesa near Florence, Arizona, are planting vineyards. They prefer the raisin grapes to the wine.

Last week Rev. Mr. Shepherd attempted to cure his two-year-old child of diphtheria at East Los Angeles by prayer and it died.

Sales of real estate are so lively in Astoria that one of its editors has organized an exchange and left his paper to be run by an assistant.

All the fruit-stands in Tucson are rendered useless for trade, owing to the swarms of bees that start in early and keep up their work until dark.

Three physicians of Los Angeles have been fined $25 each for failing to report cases of contagious diseases that were treated.

A high shovel-nose shark was caught at Catalina Island last Thursday by a young lady who was fishing for barracuta. The ugly brute weighed 850 pounds.

Manuel Rodriguez, who was arrested at Santa Ana some time ago for horse stealing, has been committed to jail in default of bail in the sum of $600.

A Sunday school for Indian children has been started at Soboba, San Diego county, by Rev. Mr. Wenland. He has now thirty pupils who make good progress.

Some years ago Judge Mattox sent a piece of cactus land to Tuna Canyon, Los Angeles county, and set it to grapes. Last spring he refused $250,000 for the place.

A cowboy named Muoray shot and killed City Marshal Wilson of Oceanside on the Fourth of July. The murderer is still at large. A reward of $1,200 is offered for him.

W. V. Gaffey of Watsonville has leased 2,000 acres of the Alviera ranch for ten years. He will plant the whole to sugar beets, and he expects to get four tons of sugar to the acre.

A Chinese wood-chopper was attacked by a California lion near Gilroy last week, but was driven off before killing his victim. Nothing but his quilted coat saved him from being clawed to pieces.

Captain D. W. Thompson of Santa Barbara has a Mexican saddle and bridle that are ornamented with $2,000 worth of solid silver. It took two silversmiths one years to finish the job.

A rancher near Del Mar, San Diego county, raised a beet last week that weighed 1291 pounds. He fed four cows on it for three days and the rest was fed to a sow and pigs, a dozen chickens and a pet crow.

George Rice of Los Angeles, editor of the Rapid Californian, was elected a clerk of the State Board of Agriculture last week. He declined the honor, as he makes more money out of his paper than the salary offered.

At least 100,000 orange trees have been taken to Oroville this season and the majority have been set. The work is now going as rapidly as possible. Other fruit trees have been planted in proportion, and the town is now in the midst of a vast orchard of citrus and deciduous fruits.

The singular escape of a Visnuere tradesman from his creditors by taking flight in a balloon has previously been mentioned. The ingenious debtor was accompanied by his wife, but unfortunately for him he decended before passing the Austrian boundary line, and was at once arrested. A carrier pigeon was used by the authorities in conveying the order for the arrest of the aeronauts.

There is much excitement at Glendora, a few miles east of Pasadena, over the discovery of a rich silver lead 4 feet wide. The rock assays $7,000 to $14,000 a ton. The discovery was made by an old miner named Miller, who has a six months' lease on the ground. The new strike is near the property of the Victoria Mining Company, an English syndicate operating in the San Gabriel canyon.

The drying of apricots at the Paige & Morton at Tulare ranch is in full operation. The yield is enormous. Besides a large number of men, about 100 [illegible] and boys are employed. Peaches are the next crop, and the yield is also very heavy. Other fruits are in splendid condition. When the drying of peaches begins 200 hands will be employed. A mule car track will be laid through the drying-grounds. The orchard now is 1,000 acres, and 400 acres more will be set to prunes this winter.

That Cantankerous Old Woman

Described in the nursery ballad, who "lived upon nothing but victuals and drink," and yet "would never be quiet," was undoubtedly troubled with chronic indigestion. Her victuals, like those of many other elderly persons whose digestive powers have become impaired, didn't agree with her. This was before the era of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, or some one of her numerous friends and relatives would undoubtedly have persuaded her to try the great specific for dyspepsia, constipation and biliousness. This would have been a measure of self-protection on their part, for she would soon have been cured and ceased to disturb them. The most obstinate cases of indigestion, with its attendant heartburn, flatulence, constant uneasiness of the stomach and of the nerves, are completely overcome by this sovereign remedy. Chills and fever and bilious remittent, rheumatism and kidney troubles are also relieved by it.

Controller Dunn last week refused to audit a warrant for the purchase of $90,000 worth of Los Angeles county bonds for the benefit of the school fund, on the ground that while authority was given in 1887, and while the indorsement thereof read and signed this 3d day of January, 1887, yet the bonds are actually signed by S. M. Perry, Chairman of the Board of Supervisors, and D. W. Hamlin, Auditor, officials who did not take their positions for eighteen months subsequent to the time when signatures to the bonds are all alleged to have been appended. The mistake, however, is simply clerical and will be rectified.

LOVE AND DUTY.

"O leave me not to turn the spindle alone,
O leave me not to pace the floor again;
There are empty cups to be filled and emptied,
A fire to be built and a child to be fed;
For I have brought from my own warm nest
Across the distant sea,
The tender love of a heart like mine
To pledge my love to thee."

"I cannot cast one plighted troth,"
The maiden coldly said;
"Till I have proved my love to right,
I may not wed thee wed.
No sooner is it Andrew's day,
And where thy likeness were
My sire was slain, and I must plant
A flower upon his grave."

The church bell chimed the eighteight hour
As, through the falling snow,
A soldier kept his lonely watch
With measured steps and slow;
But 'mid the gloom a maiden sped,
In secret, hurried flight;
She waved the lover's scarf, and passed
Unchallenged through the night.

At daybreak in the snow were traced
Strange footprints where she stept,
And through the camp a murmur ran,
"Some traitor guard has slept."
At night another soldier grave
Was measured in the snow;
For love's sweet stake his duty failed,
Yet love would have it so.

Stalking the Emu.

Mr. Powell gives an interesting account of how the natives of Australia hunt the emus of that land. The method is ingenious, but it sometimes exposes the sportsman to the risk of himself being hunted in turn.

A black, on spying emus feeding on the plain, will cover his back and head with an emu skin, allowing it to hang down well on the side towards the unsuspecting birds. In his right hand he will carry, hidden by the skin, a boomerang and one or two throwing sticks or "waddies." Then his left arm will protrude beyond the skin straight out to the elbow, and the forearm will be bent up, with the hand at right angles to it, thereby making a capital imitation of an emu's head and neck.

Now and then this hand or head will be brought to the ground as if for feeding; and as the black walks along, he imitates every motion of the bird, whilst at the same time, by means of the big toe, he drags a spear along the ground.

A friend of mine was once riding across one of the vast plains in Queensland." As he and his companions were just riding a ridge, and as their eyes cleared the summit, they saw one of the very wild blacks of the district walking quietly along toward a small scrub in the middle of the open. They pulled up to see what he would do; his sharp eye, however, soon detected the white men, though their backs only were visible to him, and he dashed into the scrub.

Almost immediately from the opposite side of the scrub darted out what to them appeared to be an emu, driven out by the entrance of the black, so they gave chase, but quickly discovered it to be only the black, acting emu, and never expecting that the white men would give chase to what was in those parts a very common bird.—Youth's Companion.

Interesting Ruins Around Delhi.

The Kûtub Minar is a magnificent pillar of red sandstone, the largest in the world, being 238 feet in height. It is situated eleven miles from Delhi among a pile of ruins, including those of a Hindoo temple and palaces. Here is an iron pillar twenty-two feet long which one of the Hindoo princes had in India placed there to keep an imaginary serpent pinned to the earth. After a number of years he had it taken up, and, euro enough, the base was found clotted with blood. He at once restored it to its place, where it has remained until the present day. In these ruined halls some beautiful bits of sculpture are discovered which would delight the antiquarian and artist. On the way back to the city numerous tombs are visited, among them those of Krishnco, the author, so the natives allege, of the "Arabian Nights," and that of Jehanara, the daughter of the queen; to whose memory the finest monument in the world is erected, the Taj at Agra. Both of these tombs are plain in comparison with others, but the marble screens which surround them are so beautiful as one would wish to see, that delicate tracery work, which seems to belong to India only, being most prominent.—Delhi Letter.

Poisons as Stimulants.

Every virulent poison known to botany or chemistry, says Dr. Felix L. Oswald, can be used for purposes of stimulation. The Yakoots of northern Siberia fuddle with poisonous toadstools, the Syrian mountaineers with arsenic, the miners of the Peruvian Andes with vertigris, the Chinese and Turks with opium, the Syrians with a decoction of hemp seed, the Malays with the acrid juice of the betel nut. In a few starving villages of Dalmatia, foxglove leaves (digitalis are used for intoxication purposes. The great preference for alcohol for centuries—and ever since the first dawn of historic tradition—may be explained by the fact that it is by far the most universally accessible of the virulent stimulants, rather than by any attractiveness of its taste, or by hereditary desires. Even the drunkard's children, contrary to common belief, are nauseated by the first taste of fermented or distilled liquors.—New York Telegram.

A Scrap of Paper Saves Her Life.

It was just an ordinary scrap of wrapping paper, but it saved her life. She was in the last stages of consumption, told by physicians that she was incurable and could live only a short time; she weighed less than seventy pounds. On a piece of wrapping paper she read of Dr. King's New Discovery, and got a sample bottle; it helped her, she bought a large bottle, it helped her more, bought another and grew better fast, continued its use and is now strong, healthy, rosy, plump, weighing 140 pounds. Once more John L. Sullivan poses as the pugilistic champion of the world, having laid out his latest antagonist, Jake Kilrain, accomplishing the act in the seventy-fifth round, taking two hours and eighteen minutes to do it in. The ring was pitched near Richburg, Miss., on a beautiful, grassy, level spot. Seat had been arranged amphitheater fashion on all four sides of the ring, and everything arranged with a view to a good and fair fight. Several special trains were run to accommodate the crowds of sports, who were just crazy to see the meeting of two such noted pugilists as Sullivan and Kilrain. The men looked the superb samples of physical manhood they were, and each was received with a hearty round of applause as he appeared. About 30,000 men witnessed the fights.

The boundaries of the said Supervisorial Districts and Election Precincts are as established on the 13th day of June, 1889, and published in the Santa Ana Standard, Fullerton Star, Evening Blade and Orange Truuse, and the names and boundaries of the Judicial Townships into which Orange County is divided are the same as before so established and existing in the County of Los Angeles, except that Anaheim Township now includes those parts of Downey and Los Nietos Townships which lie east of Coyote Creek, and does not include any territory lying north of Orange County line, and except that the boundary line between Orange and San Juan Townships lies one mile farther north than formerly, and corresponds to the precinct line between Silverado and Trabuco Precincts, and the boundary line between Orange and Santa Ana Townships is changed to correspond with the present northern and eastern boundaries of the city of Santa Ana; and except that the boundary line between Santa Ana and San Juan Townships lies one mile farther west than formerly and corresponds with the precinct line between Laguna precinct on the one side and Trabuco and San Juan precincts on the other. And the Road Districts are the same as formerly, except such changes as are necessary to make them correspond with said Township lines; each Road District including the same territory as the Precinct having the same name, except that Anaheim Road District includes Anaheim and West Anaheim Precincts, and Orange Road District includes West Orange and El Modena Precincts, and all that part of Santa Ana Road District which lies heretofore existed outside of the city limits is now included in Newport Road District and Precinct; and the names and boundaries of the School Districts into which Orange county is divided are the same as they have been formed and which existed in Los Angeles county on June 4, 1889; and it is ordered that the notice of said election be published and posted as required by law. The said election shall be held and conducted in the manner, so far as practicable, required by the Political Code, Sects. 1,142 to 1,288, inclusive, and the said Boards of Election must make the returns required by Sect. 1,291 and 1,293 of said Code, to R. Q. Wickham, Secretary of the Board of Commissioners, at the City Hall, in the city of Santa Ana, in the said county of Orange.

Fire at Bakersfield.

Editor GAZETTE.—The business portion of this city burned yesterday. The loss is estimated at a million and a quarter. The fire spread with unprecedented rapidity, and in three hours fifteen blocks were in ashes. I never realized so fully as on this occasion my helplessness in the face of fire. Property, Mortgaged for its full value, and I depended largely for indemnity on bank vaults; the bank was burned and the vault is not even opened but is yet red hot to the touch. Our fire was total.

BAKERSFIELD, Cal., July 5, 1880.

REPUBLICAN CONVENTION.

Sixty-Six Delegates Assemble at Santa Ana and do Business.

The Republican convention met at Neill's Hall, Santa Ana, promptly at 10 o'clock on Tuesday. Mr. S. Armor of Orange was elected temporary Chairman and Mr. Coen of Santa Ana, temporary Secretary. The Chairman made a short and pithy address, after which upon motion, Committees on Resolutions, Credentials and Permanent Organization were appointed, and the meeting then adjourned to 1 o'clock, to allow the various committees time in which to prepare their reports.

On re-assembling, the Committee on Credentials reported sixty-six delegates present, and that the precincts of Westminster, Garden Grove, Silverado, Yorba and Trabuco had failed to elect delegates. Messrs. T. C. Hull and George S. Mack of Westminster being present, they were, upon motion, allowed to represent that precinct.

The Committee on Permanent Organization made the usual report, and, among other things, recommended that the temporary officers of the convention be the permanent officers. The report was adopted.

The Committee on Resolutions made the following report:

The Republican party needs no apology from any one for its existence. It has a well established and acknowledged right to exist not only in Orange county but also wherever the American flag floats over a united American people, and it is the highest duty of every Republican to assert and maintain its authority and integrity.

The Republican party does not need from any one a recitation of its glorious achievements in the past. They are engraved and emblazoned upon the pages of its history and every true Republican points to them with pride. Its eulogy has been fittingly and truthfully pronounced in song and speech by the most eloquent tongues that have ever graced the annals of any nation.

We are proud to call ourselves as Republicans, and from the above standpoint we send hearty greeting to every Republican and cordially invite their co-operation in our efforts for the organization and maintenance of the Republican party in Orange county.

We believe that the beneficient purpose of local as well as general government may be safely effected by that party which has maintained the battle for more than a quarter of a century, in favor of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, to all the millions of a great nation, which, struggling ever in the vanguard of war and peace, has presented the integrity of the nation, which has yielded to no sinister motive, and submitted to no dictation save by Him who holds the destinies of nations in his hand. Now, therefore be it

Resolved, By the Republicans of Orange county in convention assembled:

First—That the Republicans of the County of Orange have never in any manner delegated to any person or body the power to compromise, control or disintegrate the Republican party.

Second—That the perpetuity of party organization as well as the sanctioning and preservation of the generous and neighborly feeling in and between all parts of Orange county is, and ought to be, of importance only second to the election of officers of established ability, integrity and fidelity.

Third—That we deplore the existence among us of those canvass methods, by invidious means, seek to set neighbor at defiance against neighbor; which tend to invade the sacred right of free and lawful assemblage of citizens; and which, if unchecked, must inevitably bear on to local discord, factional and sectional strife, and petty greed.

Fourth—That we regard the lawful, undictated and deliberate act and conviction of every citizen of every party, as alone compatible, in public affairs, with the preservation of a worthy public sentiment, or the spirit of free institutions.

Fifth—That the Republican party in this convention assembled present for its official men of ability, integrity and fidelity; and will hold its nominees bound by every obligation of honor and of law to strict fulfillment of their duties, without personal or party fear or favor.

Sixth—That we welcome as worthy opponents in the coming contest those gentlemen whom, through established usages, may be put forth by the other great party to oppose us, well knowing that if the public favor their candidates, they too will be responsible to a great party capable to condemn them if they betray their trusts.

RICHARD MELROSE, Chairman.
C. E. BERRY,
R. F. BURGESS,
MARCUS FORSTER,
D. B. NEWELL,
Committee.

The report was adopted amid great applause, after which the convention proceeded to the nomination of candidates.

Mr. J. T. Nourse in an eloquent speech nominated George L. Morgan of Santa Ana for Judge of the Superior Court. The nomination was seconded by Dr. Hayward, and upon motion of Mr. Melrose the nomination was made unanimous. Judge Morgan was called to the platform and accepted the nomination in a graceful speech.

Capt. S. O. Wood placed R. E. Edwards of Santa Ana in nomination for District Attorney, and the nomination was seconded by Mr. C. E. Berry of Orange. The nomination was made by acclamation and the gallant Colonel responded in his usual happy style.

The Shrievalty was the only plum over which there was much contention. Mr. D. B. Newell nominated Wm. Jerome of Tustin, who was seconded very affectually by Harry Dunn of Santa Ana. Mr. J. B. Parker of Orange nominated — West of St. James; seconded by Mr. H. K. Small. Mr. T. C. Hull of Westminster nominated R. T. Harris of that borg. The candidates appeared on the platform, and Mr. Jerome's appearance and terse talk doubtless affected the result. Mr. Wickham also made a very good impression, and there is little doubt that he is a safe, reliable man Mr. Harris was not present, but he was strongly vouched for by Mr. Hull. The ballot resulted in favor of Jerome by the following vote:

Jerome 39; West, 19; Harris, 10.

Mr. A. B. Codman of Anaheim was nominated by Mr. Cook for County Clerk and seconded by Mr. Wood. The nomination was made by acclamation.

Mr. C. E. Berry nominated George T. Mosbaugh of Orange for Recorder, seconded by Mr. Nourse, and the nomination was by acclamation.

Mr. Melrose nominated Fred C. Smythe for Assessor, seconded by Prof. Packard of Santa Ana, and the nomination was made unanimous.

T. J. Lockhart of Orange was nominated for Treasurer by acclamation. He was proposed by Dr. Hayward, and ably seconded by Justice J. B. Pierce.

J. P. Greeley of Placentia was nominated by S. O. Wood for Superintendent of Schools; seconded by R. B. Parker. Prof. T. N. Wells of Santa Ana was named by Mr. W. G. McPherson of Orange; the majority of the choice qualities the lamented Victorine being still able to hold this prize over our poorest grades. The best Malagas are sold not to compare with the superfine California article, and many grades were brought in ourselves to be imported, at a higher price. In one week recently 10,000 boxes of California raisins were sold in New York, and have been sold in New York, where competition with this fine fruit product is always expected to be the sharpest. There is no good reason why, with ordinary intelligence, the raisin crop should not be raised with absolute certainty in the east of labor in Europe and America and the extra freight rate overcome by still better prices. Does not a higher price for a better article prove that the consumer is willing to pay a margin of the profit to the producer in the United States, to the exclusion of the foreign product?

A SHEAF OF FANCIES.

A LOOK AT LIFE FROM THE STANDPOINT OF A NONCONFORMIST.

"Amber" Wants to Be a Protoplasm, a Barnacle or a Bird—The Earth Will Be a Paradise Some Day—Better to Be a Bird and Fly Than a Toad Under Water.

I am tired of the ceaseless waltz of events. I want to go back and be a protoplasm. I want to be a barnacle on a South Sea island rock and let the full Pacific tides wash over me and the southern suns steep me in infinite calms of laziness. I want to forget that there are such things as electric lights and steam engines in the world. My brain aches with the effort to keep up with the stride of events. I have left the same way behind a runaway horse, and once upon the cowcatcher of a fast train. I should experience the same sensation, I believe, tied to the tail of a comet sparkling through space. Give me the quiet that lurks in the clover blossom and shadow haunted woods, and you are welcome to my place in a crashing, smashing, indiscriminative world; you may fall into the ills with "rich men, poor men, beggar men, and thieves," and take up your march with them over Satan's grand boulevard to the trim and trig burying ground where souls and bodies go into eclipse.

THIS PLANET'S FASCINATIONS.

I wish I were a bird to spread my wings and fly away to the top of a tall elm tree or a mountain pine, leaving forever this crazy world, and steering my feathered sails straight into the upper blue, dipping my plumy oars in far off seas of silence. I'd go to Oregon, where the ghoulish wood chopper had never left his mark, and I'd find some forest so vast and deep that even the flutter of a falling leaf could be heard in the still air, and there I'd build me a nest of silence, drink sunshine for wine, and never grow old. And when death came I'd turn into an angel without any more fuss than it takes for a bud to change to a blossom. I'd have no funeral, nor crape, nor mourning friends, nor floral display, nor outdoor parade of hearse and followers, but I'd simply die and be done with it, as "morning melts into noon."

That fancy suggests another. Do you know, I think it would be rather difficult for a wide awake, public spirited mortal to become, at once, an angel! He would always be counting beats and prding his wing like a butterfly over a rose, to see how the world was faring. He wouldn't feel half as much interest in the hallelujahs that he used to feel in an election. It would take a long time for him to forget his old political war cry, or use himself to a government where they didn't change rulers every four years.

How would it seem, I wonder, to revisit earth after the gyves of mortality had been stricken from our faculties and the dust of limitation brushed from our vitalons, to watch the green globe, like a bubble in the sunshine, floating on its way amid the stars! Would one care to linger or be quick to bid away back to the heavenly country, glad that one's race on earth was run forever? Perhaps the shooting stars are only angel tears after all, shed by homesick spirits grieving for the old camping ground. Dimpled with dells and carved with hills, starred with seas and fringed with forests, I am inclined to think this beautiful planet would seem, even to an angel's vision, a complete pocket edition of Paradise itself, for never toll me that Heaven can be any fairer than earth shall be one day when freed from sorrow and sin.

THE OTHER SIDE.

But, aside from nature's perfection, what would a heavenly visitant see today? Tribes and races boiling like an Irishman's stew, men treading one another down to chase a mote of gold through the air, grown up boys blowing bubbles and cursing when they broke; a honeycombed landscape of graves over which forever broods the dark wing of unalleviated sorrow; fair women at their tiring glass like painted dolls in satin gowns, with sawdust in their hearts and cotton batting in their brains, cherub babies coming up from the border lands of heaven into the highways of sin, like doves flocking from green meadows and blossomy trees into the cracks and dangers of the town; ships sailing treacherous seas, freighted with souls; ships sucked down in yeasty waves while pale hands toss for help, tempests, like packs of hungry hounds loosed from the leash, tracking fruitful lands with desolation, lovers walking hand in hand together; friends and comrades in goodly fellowship, until invisible wakes summon one and another away as from our May day fields the ghosts of dandelion flowers are called by unseen winds; the grand and unstayed march of progress; the rush of steeds of steam, the crash of constant disaster; the myriad ways of taking life, the shock of armies, the secret flash of the assassin's blade, the thud of suicidal leaps, the flickering out of love guarded lives like wind blown lights, the sowing of tares by evil hands, the patient garnering of scathed harvests of golden deeds, the unequal balance of right with wrong, and all the insolence of might over right; but where and what am I, now?

I started out with the desire to be a protoplasm, and have evolved into a pictorial stuff angel! Suppose we drop the sheaf of fancies and talk about commonplace things, for the only way to avoid the world's ridicule, my dear, is to be commonplace. Like soldiers in a trench, the way to save our heads from the sharpshooters is to "lay low." The signal for your scalp locks to fly is given when you raise above the level. Be like other folks and the world will let you alone; rise to any individuality, or scorn to be a conformist, and you at once become the target for-bullets. Did it ever occur to you, though, that there is more glory in losing one's head, provided one finds it again in glory, than in keeping it on one's shoulders here, and having it counted of about as much worth by the Lord's appraisers as a unit in a row of 10,000 brass pins? I'd rather march into heaven when my time comes without a head and riddled all over with scars, than with a head stuffed full of feathers or a soul so tame that I had never dared lift itself above cover for fear of getting hurt. The toad that stays under water will never be shot, while the bird that seeks to fly will now and then fall a prey to the huntsman's aim, but who wouldn't rather be born with a bird's daring than with a toad's caution!

When I hear mothers entreating their children not to do so and so because "folks" will think them peculiar, or to be precise and prim and prudent, merely because that is the only way to escape criticism, I want to say "If the Lord had meant everybody to be alike he would have created them by the gross, as men turn out paper boxes, instead of one at a birth. If you want to carry out the divine idea in the training of your child teach him to be an individual and true to his individuality. A conformist is the most uninteresting thing possible short of a tallow candle or a patchwork quilt."—"Amber" in Chicago Tribune.

Shirt bosoms never blister if starched on the right side, but if they are wrong side out when starched they are apt to do so. Pour grated starch into boiling water, instead of pouring boiling water on the starch—in that way never using more starch than is necessary, as the simple starch and water can be saved.

HEBREW THOUGHTS.

Do not live near a pious fool.

If the fox is king, bow before him.

A miser is as wicked as an idolator.

Teach thy tongue to say, "I do not know."

Forget other people's faults by remembering your own.

Prosperity is no just scale; adversity is the only balance to weigh friends.

Thy friend has a friend, and thy friend's friend has a friend; be discreet.

Despise no man and deem nothing impossible; every man has his hour and everything its place.

To pray loudly is not a necessity of devotion; when we pray we must direct our heart toward heaven.

He or she who gives charity becomes blest, or, as it is written: "A beneficent soul will be abundantly blest."

Words are spiritual forces, angels of blessing or of curses; mastered, we control them; uttered, they control us.

There are three crowns—of the law, the priesthood and the kingship; but the crown of a good name is greater than them all.
