Chinese Empress Destroys Herself.

The young Empress of China has committed suicide. She was rebuked by the Emperor, who slapped her face, whereupon she took poison.

The married life of the young Emperor of China has not been a happy one. The outside world knows little of what goes on inside the sacredly guarded imperial palace at Peking, but enough has transpired to show that the Emperor, who is hot tempered and spirited, bitterly resented the manner in which his consort was thrust upon him against his inclinations by the imperious and self-willed Empress Dowager. The young Empress, Yo Ho Na La, found her five years of married life filled with discord and unhappiness, until at last after a violent scene with her angry spouse, she put an end to her earthly troubles by taking poison.

It was in 1889 that the Emperor married. He was then a youth of 18. The selection of his bride was governed by rules laid down in the Book of Rites, and is a tedious and elaborate process. The dynasty is Manchu, and the Emperor must marry one of his own race. For a year before the marriage was celebrated hundreds of fair competitors, all daughters of Manchu mandarins of not less than the third rank, competed for the honor of sharing the imperial throne. After several inspections in which the beauty, family influence and intellectual attainments of the young ladies were taken into grave consideration, the list of aspirants was reduced to thirty.

The Emperor himself was deeply smitten with the charms of the daughter of a high Manchu military officer and he expressed his intention to share his throne with her. He also selected another fair damsel whose beauty struck his youthful heart with admiration for his second wife, but the old lady who has so long and so nobly wielded the scepter during his minority had no intention of allowing the young Emperor to follow his bent in this matter, and had already decided on a match for him by which the throne would be shared by one of her own family.

Accordingly the lady selected was her niece, who was anything but a beauty, from the Chinese or Manchu point of view, and after a great many scenes and violent altercations, the Empress dowager proved her authority by having the marriage with her niece celebrated, but the unhappy bridegroom, though he wields sway over one-third of the human race, was as human and obstinate in affairs of this kind as any other boy of 18, and his marriage was the commencement of a bitter strife between himself and the old lady who had so kindly looked after his matrimonial welfare. He never got over his disappointment, and ever afterward regarded both the Empress Consort and her imperial aunt with an antipathy which daily grew stronger.

The unhappy young Empress was, at the time of her marriage, only 13 years old. She was the daughter of General Kuei Hsuang, a younger brother of the Empress dowager. A marriage initiated under such unhappy auspices could scarcely prove satisfactory in any respect, and the past five years have been filled with quarrels between the imperial couple, and now the end of it has come

The girl Empress, completely broken in spirit by the humiliation to which she found herself constantly subjected, has chosen death rather than try to bear the burden of her unhappiness any longer.

Building and Loan.

The first annual report of the State Board of commissioners of Building and Loan Associations, which covers the year ending May 31, 1894, embodies the statements of 137 associations of which 127 are known as locals, eight nationals and two co-operative banks.

In the year covered by the report the building and loan associations of the State had gross assets amounting to $20,820,028.18. They held capital invested by members amounting to $13,843,986 61, and accrued earnings to the amount of $4,451,490 20. All of them except three showed a net profit on the year's business and the Commissioners very justly say: "We submit that it is a successful line of business, that in times like the present and under so many different managements maintains an investment of over $20,000,000, and makes a profit of 7.77 per cent on the entire working capital."

It is worthy of note also that during the panic which overspread the country in 1893, not a single building and loan association in California was forced to suspend operations by the stringency, and the Commissioners draw the conclusion that "the history of these institutions in California goes to confirm the world-wide verdict that this is the most successful form of financial co-operation ever divined for large classes of people."

A Bigamist Baptist Preacher.

The little Baptist church at Trabuca lately called as pastor a stranger, Rev. Josiah Crouch. Being a man of good address and a ready talker, he made a fine impression and won the confidence of his congregation. His conduct in Los Angeles, however, where he was a member of the First Baptist Church, caused an investigation into his record, resulting in his exposure as a fraud.

After his arrest in Los Angeles for stealing, to which he pleaded guilty, inquiries were made at his former home in Washington, where it was found that he fled the country while under suspicion of being the murderer of his wife by drowning, and that at the time of the drowning he was the husband of another woman in Kansas, whom he had deserted and left in want under distressing circumstances. The Baptist Church at Willapa published a statement exposing him as an imposter, and the Baptist general missionary at Seattle wrote that people there regarded Crouch as the greatest scoundrel ever coming to Washington. He was next heard of at Prineville, Oregon, where he preached for a few weeks and borrowed $50, ostensibly to send to his mother, but used the money to get out of the country, leaving unsettled accounts behind. The publication of these facts made it impossible for him to impose on other communities in that section, and he came to Southern California, stopping for a few months at Los Angeles.

At first he did not make himself known to the church as a preacher, but worked in a grocery store till his employers detected him in fraudulent practices, and also found him to be a libertine. The church started an investigation, but as Crouch left the city nothing further was done till it was learned that he was preaching at Trabuca, and he was called to appear and answer to the charges. The evidence all being against him, he was warned to stop preaching and leave the country at once, but emboldened by former evasions of the law he returned to his church, when his crimes were exposed, which surprised and shocked his congregation. So incensed were the members of the church that had not Crouch taken a hasty departure he would have been severely dealt with.

Crouch has taken his departure for some new field of operation. He is wanted for bigamy and, it is believed, for murder. He is a short, dark-complexioned young fellow, presumably about thirty-five years old, and wears a small, dark mustache.

Death of the Czar.

The booming of cannon at Lividia and at St. Petersburg announced Thursday afternoon that the Czar was dead, and that he who had been the Grand Duke Nicholas reigned in his stead. The news spread throughout the world and everywhere the intelligence created sympathy for the family of him who by his policy had maintained the peace of Europe. From America were telegraphed words of sympathy, for the dead ruler had always been a friend of the great republic of the west and Americans have not forgotten how well his father's friendship sustained the North in the war of the rebellion.

There is sincere mourning in the royal and imperial families of Europe. Not the conventional mourning prescribed by rule, but the mourning of little children. For who has not heard of the annual visits of the Czar to Copenhagen, the home of his beloved Czarina, when, with the children of emperors, kings and princes around him he was the biggest child of them all, joining in their sports and romping like a big boy.

His death will be a most bitter loss to the wife, whom he loved so well that it was a proverb in St. Petersburg that he was the "only Russian who was true to his wife." His home was an ideal one, and all his pleasure was found with his own family.

But as the Czar, and not the man, who could be as stern and as unrelenting as fate itself, he has banished men and women to Siberia, but they were men and women who sought to kill him, or to overturn the government of which he was the absolute head, and which he, by the most solemn oath in the mother city of Russia, Moscow, had sworn to maintain in its integrity.

Since Tuesday, when the doctors informed the Czar that there was no longer room for hope, his Majesty composedly waited for the end, attending to the necessary state and family affairs in the short intervals of consciousness and freedom from pain. These were necessarily brief, the doctors having had recourse to sedatives to produce sleep and allay pain. On Wednesday the Czar was still able to be taken to a window of the palace, whence he gazed out upon the country he loved. The night passed with all the aggravating symptoms and dry cough. Dr. Zaccharin remained in attendance upon him throughout the night, only snatching brief intervals for sleep in the anterooms.

The morning broke with rain and wind and heavy clouds, and the weather was much colder. As the day advanced the weakness increased so rapidly that the Czar himself recognized that he could only live a few hours. He expressed a desire to receive the sacrament, which was administered to him by Court Chaplain Vanisheff and Father Ivan in the presence of the whole family. The Czar then conversed long and earnestly with Father Ivan, concluding by asking his family to again gather round him. He spoke to each member separately, and at greatest length with the Czarina. He blessed all his children present. The scene was one of deep pathos, all being in tears. At this time his Majesty was sitting up in an armchair. After taking leave of his family he grew weaker gradually, and his voice became so indistinct that it was scarcely audible.

About noon a convulsive fit of coughing was followed by a slight rally. Then until the end the Czar remained quiet, seemingly free from pain. At 2:15 o'clock he heaved a deep sigh and breathed his last in the arms of the Empress, who then broke down with the weight of her grief.

The funeral will probably be held next week. The arrival of the Prince and Princess of Wales, en route to Lividia at the time of the death, was anxiously awaited. A special train awaited them at the frontier. The presence of the Princess of Wales afforded great comfort to her sister, the Czarina, and she will make a long stay in Russia.

The theaters and restaurants of St. Petersburg were closed, but the streets were as busy as usual. Crowds stood about the places where the bulletins from Lividia were posted, reading the official announcement of his Majesty's death.

At 1 A. M. it was reported that the populace of Moscow, indignant at what they believed to be the malpractice of Dr. Zaccharin in the case of the Czar, were wrecking the doctor's house in that city.

The telegraph offices are crowded with newspaper correspondents seeking to send their reports, and merchants are awaiting the latest news from Lividia. The garrisons at Cronstadt and St. Petersburg have taken the oath of allegiance to the new Czar.

The Czarowitch Nicholas Alexandrovitch, who now comes to the throne, is short in stature, insignificant in appearance and generally supposed to be an idiot, yet he has nevertheless many amiable and gentle qualities and a kind heart, besides a very strong will. Born in 1868, he developed so slowly and showed so few mental gifts that his parents called in a specialist to pronounce upon his health. This scientific gentleman pronounced the youth a congenital idiot and was nearly killed for his frankness by the irascible Czar, who gave him a swinging box on the ear.

He has a will of his own. His father wanted him to marry one of the daughters of Nikita, the reigning Prince of Montenegro. These young ladies are of the Greek faith, so they were educated at a fashionable school at St. Petersburg and they are fine, handsome, tall and strong, of superb physique, with coal-black hair and eyes to match. But the young Czarowitch would have none of them. He had fixed his attentions elsewhere.

Alexander III., mindful of the sad fate of his brother Nicholas, who died of nervous debility, determined that his delicate son should escape that fate. Manners are still somewhat primitive in Russia and so the Czarowitch was introduced to a very charming actress, with whom he fell violently in love and who became his mistress. He loved this woman, who had an excellent disposition, so passionately that he declared his intention of marrying her, backing his resolution by the theories of Tolstoi. His father lost his temper, but did not succeed in frightening the young man, who declared that if he was not allowed to marry her he would not marry any one else.

It was for this reason that the Czarowitch was sent on his famous journey around the world, in order to give him other ideas. The wild and boisterous, but extremely powerful, Grand Duke George of Greece, went with him to amuse and take care of him. The young princes behaved with anything but repose. The journey was a perpetual orgy, interrupted by boxing, swimming and fencing matches. It was on this trip that the Czarowitch's brother, the Grand Duke George of Russia, sowed the seeds of the disease which is now killing him.

The trip around the world had its desired effect. It fortified the constitution of the Czarowitch, and cured him of his love for the actress, who had meanwhile been spirited away. On his return, however, he fell in love with the Princess Alix of Hesse. He had always had a penchant for her, and now he determined to make her his wife. His determination gave his parents more trouble, but his good natured aunt, the Duchess of Coburg, then the Duchess of Edinburgh, stood his friend. He was taken to London, and Queen Victoria conceived a liking for him, and his suit has since prospered.

Woman's Queer Experiences.

The marriage of Mrs. Helena Grassie Tilton to Dr. Sseldon Guthrie Evans, United States Navy, which took place Thursday in Brooklyn was followed by one peculiarity. The honeymoon was postponed for a month. Mrs. Tilton is a very pretty woman who has been a widow about three years and has not yet passed her twenty-fourth birthday. She became engaged to Dr. Evans a few months ago. The wedding was to have taken place next spring, but on Tuesday last a dispatch came from Washington transferring the young surgeon from the Brooklyn Navy Yard to the navy yard at Mare island. There was a hurried consultation and on Thursday noon the Rev. Sweutzel went over to Mr. Sherwood's house and performed the ceremony. Early in the evening the bridegroom took the express train for San Francisco. His bride will follow next month.

A bold attempt was made to rob Mrs. M. E. Page, widow of M. E. Page, the confectioner, at her home in Chicago. A woman called upon Mrs. Page and asked for a report of a society affair in which Mrs. Page was interested. The woman was about 27 years old, well dressed and of pleasing address. She said she was a reporter for a morning paper. Mrs. Page invited the young woman into her reception room in the second story of the house and engaged her in conversation. After some time the conversation turned upon music and the young woman requested Mrs. Page to play for her. Mrs. Page consented and seated herself at the piano. She had scarcely placed her hands upon the keys when she received three heavy blows from behind upon the top of the head. The blows, however, fell upon her hair, coiled upon the top of her head, and she was only slightly stunned and cried out lustily for help. The woman fled down the stairway to the street. Mrs. Page followed her and found that she had been stopped upon the sidewalk by two young men who seemed to be having a hard time of it holding her in custody. Before Mrs. Page could say anything one of the young men advised her to return to the house to see if any of her jewelery had been stolen. Mrs. Page did so, and after finding that nothing was missing returned to the street. The two young men and the woman had disappeared, and Mrs. Page has not seen them since. Police officers have been detailed on the case, but have made no arrests, but it is thought by them that the two young men were accomplices of the young woman, and that it was their object to get Mrs. Page's diamonds and jewelry, valued at several thousand dollars.

The Surgeon and the Kiss.

LONDON, November 3.—A few weeks ago Surgeon A. J. Smith, an officer in the Indian service stationed at Madras, asked Mrs. Clegg, wife of a civil service official, to give him a kiss. That kiss or rather suggested kiss, has almost caused a revolt in official circles in India, and has been a matter of serious consideration to the Secretary of State for India in London, and would be a subject of Parliamentary inquiry if the House committee were in session.

Dr. Smith made his very improper request while driving with Mrs. Clegg, who is an attractive matron still young. She virtuously refused, and Smith withdrew the suggestion. Mrs. Clegg afterward told her husband, who sought an explanation from Smith. The latter apologized humbly and Clegg expressed satisfaction. Nevertheless Clegg brought the matter to the attention of the authorities, who, without giving Smith an opportunity to be heard, ordered him to resign, under treat of dismissal. He appealed to the Viceroy and finally to the Secretary of State for India. All decided against him.

The severity of this judgment is making a great sensation both in India and England. Labouchere has brought his heaviest guns to bear in behalf of Smith. He indorses the suggestion which some one signing himself "American Citizen" makes in a London paper in appealing to all who ever felt tempted to commit the offense which has brought such tribulation to Smith to contribute a trifle to a fund for his benefit. Labouchere commends the suggestion to every Government official, every military and naval officer, every Judge and magistrate and every other person in authority who ever felt tempted to kiss a lady not his wife or sweetheart. He adds: "I would not go so far as to ask them to put their names to a subscription, but would suggest that they send mites anonymously to the Smith fund as a sort of conscience money."

A womans' election which was held in Riverside county Saturday attracted much attention. In the city private carriages were used and strenuous efforts made to get out a full vote. The regular ballot was used, but most of the votes cast were on the question of a new prohibition ordinance to be submitted to a vote at the regular election Tuesday. This ordinance is much more stringent than the one now in force, and the purpose of the Women's Christian Temperance Union and other temperance workers is to make a showing in favor of a more rigid law in the hope of carrying it on the 6th. Many of the women voters also indicated their preference for the various candidates on the county tickets. Four hundred and twenty ballots were cast. None were against the new prohibition ordinance. During the day the scenes about the polling-place were animated. Prayer-meetings were held in the various churches of the city. The total male vote of Riverside is about 1500. The women estimate that their total vote is about the same. Reports from the various parts of the county show a large vote polled in favor of the new ordinance.

ALL THE OTHER FELLOWS DO

He has asked the maiden for a kiss—
His love he could not smother;
She said (in fun): "Should you take one
You'd surely want another."

He shook his head and firmly said:
"I will not ask for two!"
With sweet surprise she murmured:
"All the other fellows do!"

"Whilst Wit her Lightning stories told—
As thro' Havana's clouds of gold,
The thunder storms of laughter rolled."

W. A. McGuire, a well known citizen of McKay, Ohio, is of the opinion that there is nothing as good for children troubled with colds or croup as Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He has used it in his family for several years with the best results and always keeps a bottle of it in the house. After having la grippe he was himself troubled with a severe cough. He used other remedies without benefit and then concluded to try the children's medicine and to his delight it soon effected a permanent cure. 50 cent bottles for sale by Jesson & Derge. nov

SNAP SHOTS AT THE NEWS

The President has designated November 29th as Thanksgiving Day.

One hundred and eleven passengers and thirty-two sailors of the steamer Wairapa were drowned in the wreck of that vessel on the rocks of Barrie, N. S. W., last Sunday evening.

The monthly Treasury statement issued on the first shows that on October 31, the public debt, less cash in the Treasury, amounted to $911,327,471, an increase for the month of $13,680,834.

San Diego wants the citrus fair, and Los Angeles seems to be greatly perturbed thereat. What's the matter with having it in Anaheim?—we are in the only frostless orange belt in the State.

A deputy sheriff attempted to serve a subpoena on Mrs. Delamo, wife of the Mexican Consul, at her residence at Redondo Saturday night, to make her appear as a witness in the Los Angeles court at the murder trial of Robert Ashworth. The Consul thrashed the deputy and the latter returned to Los Angeles and procured a bench warrant for the arrest of Delamo. On his return he found that the pair had boarded a train and left for Mexico.

Michael Salvator of Poughkeepsie placed a dynamite cartridge under a house in which Eugene Geneva and his wife were sleeping at Clinton Point, N. Y. He then fired four shots through the window but missed his mark. The first shot awakened Geneva, and, with his wife, he reached the adjoining room just as the dynamite exploded. Part the house and furniture were demolished, and the man and woman were badly bruised by the flying debris. Salvator was the rival of Geneva in Italy and followed the couple to America. He escaped.

The Supreme Court has decided that the law passed by the last Legislature providing for the payment of five dollars each for coyote scalps is constitutional. J. W. Ingram of Kern county presented a claim for $365 to State Controller Colgan and the latter refused to pay it on the ground that the law was unconstitutional. The Supreme Court overruled him on this point, but upheld Colgan's contention that Ingram should have had his claim passed upon by the State Board of Examiners before presenting it for payment.

A plot to kidnap George Gould and hold him long enough to force him to sign a check for $100,000 was all but carried out some weeks previously to the departure of the millionaire to England to race the Vigilant. It was carefully laid by a gang of counterfeiters and bank burglars, and according to one of their number it would have been successful if it were not for the arrest of the leader on an old charge. The scheme was to capture Gould while on the way from Arkville station to his Furlough lodge in the Catskills, nine miles distant. Seven men were in the plot. Gould laughed when told of his escape and said he did not fear kidnaping.

A clash between the American Protective Association and its opponents occurred in San Diego one night last week. Charles Collier, a prominent young attorney, learned the meeting place of the order and publicly took the names of all entering the hall. Six members attacked him, and he knocked a man named Warner down. Some one returned the compliment, knocking Collier off the side walk. About twenty men came to Collier's rescue, and canes were being freely used when the police stopped the fight and dispersed the crowd. Sympathizers of both sides made threats on the streets but no more trouble is anticipated.

Carmelita Morales, a young lady 19 years of age, was brought into the San Bernardino Superior Court on a writ of habeas corpus. She had been confined under lock and key by her father for some time, to prevent her marriage to her lover, Don Agepto Ortega. Her father's consent to the nuptials was refused because Ortega would not follow the family to Old Mexico, and there take up his residence with them. The father told the young lady she was under age, and refused to give his consent to the marriage. Upon investigation at Visalia, the place of her birth, the records showed the blooming Carmelita over 19, hence the writ. While the case was being heard in court a marriage license was secured in the County Clerk's office and the couple were happily married. Good enough.

George Kirk shot Mrs. Florence Schultz and then put a bullet into his own brain shortly after midnight Saturday night. He was instantly killed, but Mrs. Schultz, though in a critical condition, has a chance for recovery. Jealously was the cause of the shooting. Mrs. Schultz, upon returning home from the theater, found Kirk outside waiting for her. While her friend passed into the house she remained talking to him. What passed between them is not known. They quarreled, and their voices were heard raised above the ordinary tone of conversation. Then two shots rang out, and those in the house running out found Mrs. Schultz lying on the sidewalk with a bullet wound in her neck. Beside her lay the lifeless body of Kirk, with a bullet hole just behind his right ear. This was all in the wicked city of Chicago.

Mrs. Annie T. Barkdull of Eureka, Cal., hanged herself at an early hour Sunday morning at Dr. Potter's Home for Inebriates at San Francisco. She was brought from Eureka several weeks ago, suffering from a brain disorder, and was put in the place to keep her from doing harm to herself and others, as she was very violent at times. She had only one nurse to attend her, and the nurse was so tired Saturday night that she fell asleep, and, all unconscious to the actions of her patient, slept while Mrs. Barkdull made her preparations to die.

The woman took the little brass chain from the curtain, fastened it around her neck and hung one end of the chain to the hook on the door, let her whole weight rest on the chain and so strangled herself. Dr. Potter's place has long been under a cloud, and the suicide will be investigated to the bottom.

James Hards and Mrs. Helen Thurman were married at Applegate, Oregon, Saturday. Twenty-eight years ago Hards and Mrs. Thurman's stepfather owned adjoining claims on Butte creek. Hards and the young girl married. A few months later the men quarreled and Arnold, the stepfather, induced Hards' wife to leave him. The following day Hards killed Arnold and then left the country. A few years later his wife secured a divorce and married Charles Thurman. Several years ago Thurman died, and soon after Hards returned to Jackson county. He was immediately arrested, tried and convicted of the murder of Arnold. Mrs. Thurman became interested in him and visited him often. After he had served two years in the penitentiary she circulated a petition for his pardon, which was acted favorably upon by Governor Pennoyer. Soon after Hards was given his liberty he and his former wife remarried.

Pouring kerosene oil over a sick horse, setting fire to it and standing by to make sure that it burned to death, are the outlines of the charge on which Weiner Heuisen of Newark, N. J., was arrested. Jacob Wolfs told Heuisen that his horse was ill. He examined the horse and sent for a can of kerosene. This he placed on the horse's back. "The horse has colic," he said, "and nothing will cure him but heat. I am going to warm him." The animal was tied to a heavy post in the stable-yard and Heuisen set fire to the oil. It blazed up at once and the horse was soon rearing and plunging in the greatest agony. Heuisen stood by with folded arms and smiled. Wolf meanwhile ran up and down shouting that Heuisen was killing his horse. Heuisen ordered some blankets brought out in order to put out the fire. The horse fell, however, in the death agonies and in a few minutes expired. A great hole had been burned in its back.

Miss Kate Howarth, a belle of Lewis and Carter counties, Ky., some months ago was engaged to be married to James T. Goodwin, a handsome young mountaineer. They quarreled and she received the attentions of Nathan Taylor, a wealthy young farmer. After a short courtship their wedding was announced. A large number of guests had assembled, and everything was in readiness for the ceremony when Goodwin rode up to the house and sent word that he would like to speak with Miss Howarth. Taylor objected, fearing Goodwin meant to injure her, but she hurried out and talked with him. Suddenly she sprang upon the horse behind Goodwin and went racing away toward the Ohio State line. Pursuit was unsuccessful. The runaways reached the Buckeye State in time for a hasty marriage before those following reached them.

Franklin Moss, who lives in a handsome home near Oakland, is a rich man, but he cannot handle a dollar of his money, having been declared incompetent after an interesting contest. The old man has a pretty young wife in whom he naturally takes a great interest. His family of daughters does not approve of his marriage and, in consequence, there is some ill-feeling over the matter. The old man, however, took sides with his young wife, and now the daughters and their step-mother do not speak. It is believed that the old man was wasting a great deal of his property, so his relatives had him brought into court and examined with the result that a guardian of his estate was appointed by the court, and three men were appointed to appraise the estate of the incompetent. They have been hunting up his property for a couple of months and they value the estate at $100,395.

At 6:35 o'clock Friday night the strongest earthquake shock ever felt in Mexico occurred in the City of Mexico, lasting over five minutes. Many houses and walls fell. The streets were full of fleeing people. Many were wounded, and a number have died. The electric and other lights went out, leaving the city in darkness. All traffic was suspended. The streets were filled with screaming, praying people. The scene was indescribable. People in theaters, which were all running at the time, were frightened, and panics were averted only by the police. At Orrin Theater, "Jaun Tenorio" was being given. Just as the graveyard scene was presented the people, naturally superstitious, saw the stage move, and screamed that the end of the world had come, and fled. People in trams were the most frightened of all. All telephonic connections were interrupted. The shocks were felt in the surrounding towns but details are not received yet. It is reported that three persons were killed and ten wounded.

Miss Caroline C. Tams was to have been a bride in San Francisco on Saturday night. She had been engaged for some time to Ols Walum, who is employed on the United States Revenue Cutter Corwin. Walum had saved sufficient money to build a cottage, which was completed a few days ago. Last week Miss Tams became ill. Although her condition was not considered serious, the wedding was postponed until her recovery. In the meantime Walum had been summoned to his post on the Corwin and started north under orders. On Saturday night, the evening on which she was to have been married, Miss Tams took a sudden turn for the worse, and expired the following morning. Her dying request was that she should be buried in her wedding gown from the house which was to have been her home. Walum will not know of his fiance's death until the Corwin returns. Meantime the remains of the bride, robed in her wedding dress, rested in a coffin in the unfurnished house built by the bereaved bridegroom, who is ignorant of his loss.

One scene in a domestic tragedy was enacted in a Chicago graveyard. A distracted mother, standing beside a reopened grave, identified the body of her eighteen-months-old child, which had died while in the possession of its father who did not even notify her of its death. The case of Minnie Urban against her husband, John, for divorce is on the docket of Judge Tuthill's court. During the trial John Urban testified that their daughter Jennie, whom he had taken from her mother, was dead. Mrs. Urban refused to believe it, as it was the first intimation of such a calamity she had received, and was not satisfied until the court issued an order for the disinterment of the body, that it might be identified by its mother. Armed with the order of court, Mrs. Urban and her husband, accompanied by two witnesses, went to Greenland cemetery. The grave was opened. The lid covering the face of the dead child was taken off, and Mrs. Urban viewed the features. The ravages of death had marred them, and Mrs. Urban was not satisfied. The coffin lid was removed and an examination of the body for a birthmark was made and the mark found. Then Mrs. Urban fainted, overcome by the realization that her daughter was dead.

From Oklahoma Territory lately there have been coming stories of "Dolly, the Queen of the Outlaws," who has become fully identified with the Cook gang. She accompanies them on their pillaging expeditions, and is said to be a handsome, dashing young woman, who possesses courage unlimited and whose daredevil resistlessness exceeds that of the once noted Belle Starr. She wears a six-shooter and big bowie knife and carries a rifle. She is a dead shot and is cool and collected in times of danger. The gang was camped not far from Mildraw not long ago, when she went into town, accompanied by two of the boys as far as the outskirts. Attired in a short dress, closely fitting jacket and felt hat, she boldly walked into the postoffice and inquired for mail, after which she visited some stores where she did some trading, carrying a six-shooter all the while. Near the edge of town she held up three men, taking from one a gold watch and from the others a small sum of money. She then walked cooly up the railroad track where she was joined by the outlaws. Dolly is but 20 years of age. Her true name is unknown and she guards the secret of her identity well.

It is believed by the Tennessee State Health Board that the horrible practice of murdering infants for insurance taken out on them is rapidly growing among the lower classes of negroes and an investigation is now in progress, which promises to disclose a shocking condition of affairs. For a long time the board has been closely watching the movements of certain insurance companies who make a business of selling risks on the lives of infants and very young children, and they have found that the practice has become so general that it demands immediate investigation and correction. As the rates on this class of life insurance are very cheap, a large business has been done even among the poorer classes and it is thought that a number of child-murders have been the result, but because of the difficulty of obtaining evidence no specific facts have been adduced. The committee which was appointed to look into the matter has just made its report to the Board of Health, containing such startling information that the board has seen fit to address a circular letter to every city physician in every city in the State, asking for a personal investigation upon their part. City Physician Holland of Chattanooga said that during the past few months many suspicious deaths have occurred among the infants of the lower class of negroes and for various reasons he was confident that the children had been murdered for the insurance money.

For a pain in the side or chest there is nothing so good as a piece of flannel dampened with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bound over the seat of pain. GOOD MORNING, Mr. Budd; have you used Pear's Soup?

THE SYCAMORE DITCH EJECTMENT SUIT.

THE CITY TRUSTEES have brought suit to eject the water ditch on Sycamore street, which has been located there for perhaps thirty years, and also to close the ditch on Olive street, between Broadway and Santa Ana streets. This suit had its inception in the discussion between the city and the water company as to which was responsible for the placing of a bridge over the ditch in the rear of Trustee McWilliams' residence on Broadway. We doubt if it will be countenanced by the tax payers of the city. To have closed up the ditch on Olive street would not perhaps have been so bad, and we have from the inception of the subject—which it strikes us would make a capital subject for the libretto of a comic opera—looked upon it as in the nature of airy persiflage; but to begin proceedings to force them to close an irrigation ditch which has been in use uninterruptedly for thirty years, and when extensive improvements in the way of cementing were about to be inaugurated, is quite another thing. We can see no reason why the ditch should be closed up; no one, so far as we have been able to ascertain, has entered complaint against it, and it subserves a very good purpose in furnishing water for the irrigators upon its line and beyond its western terminus. The attempt of the Trustees to force its close can have but two results, and both of them are unfortunate. One is to inaugurate an expensive lawsuit, for probably the water company will not give up its right to the ditch without a stubborn contest, and assuredly no one cares to have a lawsuit these hard times; and the other is the occasion which the lawsuit gives those who have been in favor of removing the office of the company to Fullerton, for again pressing the propriety of that proposition.

If the Sycamore street ditch were in any way a menace to the well-being of travelers along that thoroughfare, or was an object of complaint to residents along its line, we should say close it up very quickly, but being a useful ditch and having stood for thirty years one of the principal ditches in Anaheim, we doubt the propriety of bringing this ejectment suit, and we doubt not the city starts into a losing fight at the outset.

Stop this nonsense! Let the ditch be cemented where it properly belongs; let no encroachment upon the street be permitted by the water company, or any other corporation; but let us stop the unnecessary expense of this altogether impolitic lawsuit. The suit may be welcomed by the lawyers, perhaps; but the overburdened taxpayers will we apprehend view the matter in quite a different light.

TWO HUNDRED AND THIRTY-THREE votes were polled at the election in town on Tuesday, and 148 were cast at West Anaheim, giving us 381 votes for the two places. This gives us the right to two precincts, and steps should be taken to consolidate the town and enlarge the city limits to that end. The law requires that each voting precinct shall contain not more than 200 voters, and in town more voters appeared at the polls than is contemplated by the statutes. Before another election there will probably be an entire redistricting of the political lines and precincts throughout the county, and we shall not find ourselves exempted from the cutting up process. Part of the West Anaheim territory may be tacked on to Fullerton or Garden Grove, or perhaps a new precinct may be created in the country west of town—probably the latter will be the result. To prevent this cutting up it would seem to us that steps ought to be taken to enlarge the city sufficiently to take in these outlying sections, and form the city into two wards. Now that a new electric light plant is about to be put in, it strikes us that the people living on the outside of the city limits should manifest a desire to come in and secure electric lights for their outlying sections. The electric light tax is five cents on the hundred, and we confidently expect the system to net a comfortable return from the private lights in town to form the nucleus of quite a respectable sinking fund for the payment of the debt. Another matter affecting the increase of the city limits is the improved standing in point of population it gives us among the cities and towns of Southern California. Voters east of town living just across the city limits come through the city and go down to the West End to vote, almost on the western edge of town. This seems ridiculous, but the cramped city limits permit of no other way of voting.

Let us take a vote on increasing the city limits and spreading the electric light to the outlying sections!

RECENTLY the scale of wages in the refinery at Chino, as we are informed, have suffered a horizontal cut. The reduction in the Oxnard refinery at Norfolk amounted to 10 per cent, and presumably at least the same cut prevailed at Chino. With sugar estimated at a cent a pound higher next season than it ruled in the markets the present year—which we think will be found to be the logical sequence of the abolition of the bounty and the institution of the tariff—the profits accruing at Chino will be, on ten million pounds of sugar, $100,000 over and above the amount of profit enjoyed this year. A cent and a half advance—and there is no certainty that the commodity will not advance to that figure by next summer—will raise the net profits to $150,000. The payments for beets the coming season will be made upon the basis of a sixty cent cut per ton for beets polarizing 16 per cent of saccharine, and not less than fifty thousand tons of beets will be raised. A saving of 60 cents per ton gives us $30,000, and the advance of a cent a pound in the price of sugar would bring this interesting calculation of the refinery's net profits to $130,000, and a cut of $10,000 in the labor schedule at the sugar mill would increase this amount to $140,000. With sugar a cent and a half per pound higher, this sum of the sugar mill's net profits would swell to $190,000.

Query: If a bounty of two cents per pound on considerably less than eight million pounds of sugar manufactured in 1893—equaling less than $160,000—would net the refinery a profit of eighty per cent upon the capital invested, what reasonable degree of profit would the mill expect before exempting themselves from possible loss by subjecting the farmers to a horizontal cut of $30,000 for their beets next season? What degree of profit would they expect, in view of this abolition of the bounty, before cutting their labor down 10 per cent in their mill? Their right to close down operations unless the business nets them a reasonable degree of profit is freely conceded, but what we should like to arrive at is, what does the mill consider that reasonable degree of profit to be? Again, if the bounty in 1893 netted them 80 per cent of profit on subsidy payments of $160,000, how much depreciation under that handsome figure will they sustain by the substitution in lieu thereof of the net increase in the price of sugar and the decreased pay for beets, a sum equaling not less than $130,000?

WATER BOARD.

DIRECTORS TO GO ON A JAUNT TO THE HEAD OF THE DITCH TO LAY OUT NEW CEMENT WORK ON THE MAIN CANAL.

The Directors of the water company met in regular session on Saturday, present Crowther, Botsford, McFadden, Spencer, Nebelung and Amerige.

Mr. Amerige reported from the Law Committee on the Jurupa suit that the report of the engineers on the water rights on the line of the river between the head of the Cajon canal and Colton had been filed, showing the owners of property aligning the river, number of ditches taking water therefrom, amount of water, etc. The Jurupa flume had collapsed last winter and had not been repaired and no water is being taken from the river by the irrigators on that ranch. No improvements in the water service are being made, the suit brought against them for illegal diversion of water having acted as a deterrent. The land purchased by settlers from the Stearns Ranchos, and paid for in part, has in consequence been returned to the company.

Mr. Spencer reported that he had contracted with John Kuebler to take out twenty trees on East street on the line of the cement ditch, at fifty cents per tree.

Mr. Botsford reported that he had called upon Mr. Wade of the Santa Fe company in reference to making necessary changes in the ditch and railroad track at Horseshoe bend, and had requested Mr. Wade to furnish transportation for the Directors and Engineers to the point where the changes are to be made. The board and railroad engineers will probably go up to the Bend in a Pullman shortly.

The Finance Committee reported bills passed upon to the amount of $839.61, and warrants drawn in payment of same, also $123 for cement. On hand in hands of Treasurer and Secretary $1,980.30.

Various communications were read in reference to notes.

Gray Bros. & Ward announced that they had completed the South Branch ditch, and asked that a committee go over the work. To the Ditch Committee.

Mr. Botsford moved that the Engineer go over the ditches in Anaheim to ascertain if any of them may be dispensed with. Carried.

The Secretary was instructed to notify the City Fathers that in reference to the bridge on Olive street near Broadway, the board had the matter under consideration pending the Engineer's report on abandonment of unnecessary ditches in town.

Mr. Benchley appeared in reference to the work on the barranca on his place. Referred to Superintendent, with instructions to attend to the same.

Superintendent Sheppard's report showed a monthly expense of $397.37½ for cleaning main and branch ditches and employees' salaries.

The board decided to go up to the head of the ditch this morning to lay out plans for doing necessary cementing.

The bridge on East street, at the corner of Sycamore, was reported to be in bad condition, and a new bridge was ordered put in, the county to foot half the bill, as had been agreed upon by them.

The bridge on Spadra road north of the sand wash was ordered widened six feet at each end. Adjourned.

ALAMITOS NOTES.

Now that the electioneering turmoil is over, and we are breathing freer, the next popular move would be for the fortunate candidates to call a meeting of themselves together, elect a chairman, and make a motion to the effect that "our salaries be reduced twenty-five per cent." That would be a motion that all California would second. Is it fair that the hard times and commercial depression should fall on the taxpayer alone? Should the down-trodden farmer work all day and do chores at night on rations that hardly keep body and soul together? I know what I'm talking about. In Alamitos, with all its fertility and resources, there are families who cannot send their children to school for lack of clothes, and there are families who have not seen butcher's meat for months and months. Yet the taxes are just the same, for clothes may go and meat may go, but they may gone on forever. Now we all know that the work connected with the various offices of the State sits lightly on the incumbent. It demands neither perspiration nor wear and tear of muscle; and the prevalent idea among us farmers is, that the office-holder is overpaid. With what a grace it would come, then, if the lucky candidates made a voluntary reduction of their incomes. It would write their names in big letters on the hearts of a grateful people, and demonstrate a fact long doubted, that the office-seeker seeks the office for his own personal aggrandisement. Will a move be made in the movement referred to? Not a bit of it.

The Seventh Day Adventists dedicated their church last Sunday. There was a large congregation, and the point made by the preacher was that they, the Adventists, were "God's own peculiar people." I don't question the peculiarity business; they are a peculiar people. The only regrettable thing about it is that Christianity after a lapse of 4,000 years has such a diminutive following. If the Adventists only are Christians, and they and they alone keep the commandments of God, a big baloon will be sufficiently large to transport them heavenward when their lives of "perfect obedience" are ended here. Withal, the Adventists are the best of neighbors, and if one does not relish their peculiar doctrines we need not go where they are preached.

Robert Rankin is digging his peatland potatoes. He is undecided whether to roll or haul them home. One of them is sufficient to make a meal for an average family.

COURAGE OF ITS CONVICTIONS.

The ANAHEIM GAZETTE celebrates its twenty-fifth birthday, and claims to be the oldest paper in Southern California. With regard to this claim we rather think the San Diego Union antedates the GAZETTE. Apart from this we may say that the GAZETTE has lived through good times and bad times, and is prosperous because it deserves to live and has the courage of its convictions.

About daylight Monday morning the lifeless body of Mathew M. Bartlett, a well-known young man, was found on the St. Helens avenue sidewalk in Seattle by a newsboy. His right ear was bruised and his nose bloody, but he bore no other marks of violence, though papers from his pockets were scattered about. His gold watch was untouched. An autopsy failed to disclose the cause of death. A theory quite generally advanced is that Bartlett was murdered for knowing too much about the mysterious death of Accountant Joseph A. Shadle, at the Steilacoom Insane Asylum, last March. Some claimed then that Shadle was poisoned, though a subsequent investigation seemingly refuted the claim. At that time Bartlett was an attendant at the asylum, remaining until last September. Several nights of last week he was followed by two men, and, in explaining the matter to friends, said that it was because he knew too much about the Shadle case. He bought a revolver and was somewhat worried about the matter. Friday night the two mysterious men attempted to hold him up, but he evaded them.

A Big Dress Order.

"Women play odd tricks on one another sometimes," said a smart American woman the other day, "but the queerest I ever heard of was perpetrated by one social leader in a western city upon another. They were rivals and hated each other accordingly, though outwardly they preserved the semblance of pleasant relations. Every chance that either got to give a dig at the other was eagerly seized.

"But the final and most effective stroke, after which no calls were exchanged, was delivered by Mrs. L——. She sent out cards for a grand entertainment and then took pains to find out what Mrs. F——, her competitor, was going to wear. A gorgeous pink brocaded satin was the material of Mrs. F——'s gown, it was ascertained.

"Accordingly Mrs. L——, whose husband was in the dry goods business, obtained several hundred yards of the same identical stuff and draped the walls of all the rooms on the lower floor of her house with it. You may imagine the feelings of Mrs. F—— on arriving in her superb new frock, which she expected to make a sensation. Naturally she ordered her carriage and drove away in tears."—London Tit-Bits.

Kite Flying In Burma.

Mr. E. D. Cuming, author of "In the Shadow of the Pagoda," describes the Burmese as much given to kite flying, an amusement that they contrive to enjoy with a minimum of bodily exertion. Their method of operations is very simple. Says Mr. Cuming:

You pare down two 12 inch slips of bamboo, tie them at their centers crosswise, run a thread around the four tips and paste upon this frame one thickness of paper. Tie a nail or a small screw nut to one corner, and your kite is made.

The altitude that a well made kite of this kind will reach is wonderful, and the lightest breath of wind will take it up. A hundred and fifty or 200 yards of strong sewing thread, wound on a skeleton reel of 4 inches in diameter and 8 inches in length, completes the equipment.

Then, having started the kite by a process of gentle playing, you squat down in the middle of the street, so as to keep your thread clear of the houses and let the kite help itself.

If you have fastened the thread with cunning, the kite rises almost perpendicularly, bringing you joy in the envy and admiration of those who cannot make a steeper angle than 40 degrees. The kite having taken out all the thread, you sit and contemplate it poised still and clear in the upper air for a few hours.

In Rangoon, on a still morning or evening, hundreds of kites float over the Burmese quarter of the town, some nearly out of sight, others hovering just above the roofs. When driving, your syce has frequently to halloo out of the way a middle aged man who is backing slowly down in midstreet coaxing his kite up. He goes about the business with a ponderous solemnity that raises it to the dignity of a science.

An Extraordinary Hand.

The Empress Eugenie recently took Prince Napoleon with her to Windsor to present him to the queen as her heir—an impressive fact when the ex-mistress of the Tuileries' fortune is considered. Most of her wealth is in good English stocks too. It is being told of Eugenie that, on a late visit to Paris, she went "incog." to a fashionable palmist to have her fortune read. As part of the necromancer's art is not to see his fair penitents, she had to put her hand through a slit in a screen. After quite a cursory examination the fortune teller said: "Madam, your hand is so extraordinary that one or two things must be the truth. Either my skill must be at fault for once, or you must be the Empress Eugenie, for no other hand could tell of such strange vicissitudes."

GOOD NIGHT.

Pale in the amber flooded west
A horned moon dips low,
And soft through silver silences
The rose winds faintly blow.
Yet still a horned moon shall lend
A lance of lingering light
To cross the wind, to cross the dusk
And give my love good night.

The long lake rippling through its reeds
Hath lilies all ablow.
At fall of dew each sleepy flower
Folds up her leaves of snow.
Yet one fair lily bud shall wake
To smile all virgin white
Across the dark, across the dew
And give my love good night.

The light may fall, the lily fade,
The lightning's lurid glow
Flame in the sky, the rose winds rise
To storms that rudely blow.
Yet constant still, as rose to June,
This heart shall take delight
Across the dark, across the world
To give my love good night.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

A Little Linguist.

Not until January will little Fannie Erdofy reach the mature age of 4 years, and yet she is perhaps the most accomplished young lady of her age in New York. Fannie illustrates in her charming little personality the irresistible law of heredity. She speaks fluently four languages, and when it is explained that her mother writes and speaks six languages and that her father has a glib acquaintance with 10, besides numerous allied dialects, the extraordinary infant is accounted for.

Arthur Erdofy, who is a registry clerk and interpreter at Ellis island, was born 32 years ago in Budapest. His wife is also a native of the same ancient city on the Danube. He has the characteristic Magyar features as well as that special linguistic aptitude which distinguishes his race. He speaks English with great purity and has the further polyglot accomplishment of speaking Hungarian, German, French, Italian, Spanish, Greek (Romanic), Turkish, Finnish and that most turgid and difficult of all tongues, Basque. Mrs. Erdofy speaks fluently English, Hungarian, German, French and Slavonian, and so little Fannie has lived all her life in a philological atmosphere, where the air was thick with prepositions, adverbs and conjunctions. Instead of doll babies she played with irregular verbs, and the ablative absolute and the subjunctive mood have been familiar objects to her from her earlier infancy.—New York Press.

The Three "Tentions."

"I was some time since," says a certain writer, "at a railway station waiting for a train. On the platform, seated on a form, were an old gentleman and two little children. I could not help hearing the remarks which he was making to them, which were spoken in a pleasant and loving manner.

"'Be sure,' said he, 'you do not forget the three 'tentions—intention, attention and retention.'"

We might apply these "'tentions" with much instruction in various ways, but children at school in particular may profit much by remembering them.

Let us take "intention" first. If a boy has a sum to work out or a lesson to learn by heart, he will not be likely to succeed unless he goes at it with a will or unless he "intends" to do it.

Secondly, "attention." If he is to succeed, a boy must withdraw his thoughts from tops, balls, kites and such like. He must not chatter with his schoolfellows, but he must for the time give his whole mind, or "attend," to the lesson before him.

Thirdly, "retention." It is of but little use to learn anything unless we remember it or "retain" it in mind.—Christian Work.

A Little Musician.

Only 5½ years old, Edna Grace Hain with her tiny fingers can bring 30 different airs out of a piano. She has learned them all in the last seven months. If a key invisible to her be struck, she can instantly sound the corresponding key of another piano. Let the entire keyboard be covered with muslin or cloth, not too heavy to muffle, and she still makes good music by striking keys which she cannot see. Her first stroke on the unseen ivory may be a mistake, but in a moment she hits the right key and then proceeds unerringly. She cannot read music or words, but thoroughly understands the scale, quickly distinguishes half notes and keeps good time. If she hears a strange air two or three times, she can make her piano produce it.—Philadelphia Record.

Wonderful Singing Baby.

Little Marion Dungan, the beautiful daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. K. Dungan of Pottsville, Pa., surpasses any record yet as a singing baby. She is but 17 months old, and her repertory is quite a lengthy one, consisting of "Little Birdie In a Tree," "My Nellie's Blue Eyes," "The Minuet," "Sunshine Will Come Again" and many more. Though unable to pronounce many words, she sings the tunes perfectly and keeps perfect time.—Philadelphia Press.

My Chum.

If I say "boo," he'll scowl at you
And wrinkle up and growl,
But he won't bite a single mite
Unless you run and howl.

A REPUBLICAN LANDSLIDE.

The Republican County Ticket Elected.

Frank Steadman Defeated Although He Has Every Reason to Feel Proud of the Vote Given Him by His Neighbors—Potter Beats Porter—Pierce and Landell Justices, and Groat and Bittner Constables—Complete Returns from This (the Third) Supervisor District, and Tabulated Statement of the Vote in the County So Far as Received.

THE MAJORITIES.

Every Republican candidate in the county is elected. The majorities figured out last evening, with the three small precincts of Newport, Trabuco and Silverado to hear from, are as follows:

McKelvey	599
Nichols	527
Brock	766
Ballard	616
Scott	42
Vegely	176
Harris	271
Freeman	586
Hall	888
Greeley	789
Kellogg	581
Clark	853

Hawkins, Populist, for Supervisor is elected in the Second district. All the other Republican candidates for Supervisor are elected.

Nick Bitner is the only Democrat elected in the State!

Whoopee! But wasn't it a landslide!

The sun peeped over the hills bright and clear Tuesday morning, and the thought might have suggested itself to the average voter that it was ideal beet weather; but it was far from being ideal weather for the Democrats. In fact the unterrified have suffered a snowstorm from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and Orange county has been no exception. At this writing (Wednesday afternoon) it seems that the entire Republican county ticket has been elected.

Frank Steadman is defeated for Tax Collector. Frank was the first one to vote Tuesday morning, and he plunked in a ballot for Budd. He remained up all night Tuesday to keep the fire going for the election board, and when he went to bed yesterday morning at half past 6 a hen ran around into his front yard, cackling "Republican and Populist! Republican and Populist! Republican and Populist!" and Frank knew that the landslide had struck him. No fellow ever had any luck with a hen cackling at him when he went to bed in the morning.

It took the election board all night to count the returns, and when the reporter went down to West Anaheim for the returns at half-past 6 the board were still hard at work figuring up the result.

The earliest returns in were from this supervisor district, brought in to THE GAZETTE office by carrier at 7 o'clock. At that time it was apparent that Potter was elected over Porter. His majority is 137 in the district. Potter will make a good Supervisor. The full tabulated statement appears elsewhere.

THE GAZETTE bulletin board was a source of unflagging interest during the day. Crowds gathered around all day long and discussed the prospects of this candidate or that, until a dispatch was posted to the effect that the whole Republican ticket was elected. The election passed off quietly, and quite a heavy vote was polled on this side of the river.

At West Anaheim a vote was taken out of the ballot box without a cross stamped upon it at all. Not a candidate had been voted for. In one of the Justice of the Peace blanks a name had been written, but it was indecipherable. The vote was counted, of course, but it did none of the candidates any good.

ANAHEIM.

Total vote, 233.

Governor—Budd, D, 87; Estee, R, 99; French, Pro, 5; Webster, Pop, 36.

Lieut.-Gov.—Dunn, Pro, 8; Gregg. Pop, 38; Jeter, D, 81; Millard, R, 94.

Kleinigkeiten.

—Prof. Fox has changed the location of his barber shop to the place lately vacated the by Hussman boys.

—The barbers of the city have decided to keep open Sundays, when shaves will be a quarter.

—Mrs. Mary Kraemer Miller has disposed of her warehouse at Fullerton to T. S. Grimshaw, for $1,000.

—Frank Schaumberger has been in town for a day or two past renewing old acquaintances. Frank is located in Los Angeles now.

—A special meeting of the stockholders of the co-operative beet sugar company is called to meet at Kroeger's Hall on Saturday afternoon, December 1st, at 2 o'clock.

—Ten new members will be initiated into the Fraternal Aid to-morrow night, when a literary and musical program will be rendered and a luncheon served by the ladies.

—Mr. Hache informs us that not less than two thousand and possibly three thousand acres of sugar beets will be plant d in this neighborhood this coming season.

—The young people's social club, yclept Midwinter Merrymakers, entertain their friends at a cobweb party at the parlors of the Del Campo to-morrow evening. Sort of spider and fly racket.

—Another change has been inaugurated in the arrival and departure of trains over the Santa Fe. The changes will be noted in the time table published in another column.

—Judge Pierce having been triumphantly re-elected to the office of Justice of the Peace, has moved his office two doors east of his former place of business, in the premises lately occupied by Prof. Fox, the barber.

—The directors of the irrigation district at their meeting on Friday displaced Mr. Reiser as Treasurer of the district and appointed Mr. Cahen of the Citizens' Bank, who will act in that capacity until the final winding up of the district.

—Receipt of a copy of the Great Register with the compliments of Mr. James Fullerton of the Orange News is acknowledged. The work is of high quality and reflects credit upon even such an ambitious printer as Mr. Fullerton is known to be.

—The Kuebler boys are putting down cement crosswalks in Santa Ana, and the same ought to be done in this city before the rainy season sets in. They get the brea from the canyon above Carlton, where they blast it out with powder, and have already used some fifty tons in their work at the county seat.

—Mr. Cheeseman, the West End grocer, is carrying one of his hands in a sling as a result of a severe attack of rheumatism, which however has lately yielded somewhat to treatment. He informs us that notwithstanding his indisposition he is doing a rushing trade on a strictly cash basis.

—Mr. Leffingwell, Jr., has taken his departure from Knoxville, Illinois, for Fullerton, where he will probably remain during the winter. Mr. Leffingwell is interested in the orange industry at Placentia, and will prove to be a desirable acquisition to the population of our neighboring town.

—Mr. W. J. Smith informs us that he is thinking of going into the cold storage business in town. Mr. Smith is one of the most successful hog raisers in Southern California, and should he embark in the new enterprise which he now has in contemplation he will without doubt make a success of it.

—The Ladies' Society and the Epworth League of the German M. E. Church will give an entertainment at the residence of Rev. Fritz Reiser, next to the church, tomorrow (Friday afternoon) and evening. A cordial invitation is extended to all friends. An excellent literary and musical program has been prepared. Rev. Fritz Reiser will play Weber's Invitation a la Valse and sing a bass solo by Abt.

—The escapades of a young woman in male attire in Kellar's saloon was quite enough to debar that gentleman from being granted a license by the City Fathers Monday. The saloon has lately come to be the headquarters for worthless characters, who should be forced to emigrate to pastures new. We have no room here for this class of people.

—We are sorry to hear of the serious illness of Mr. Theo. Staley of Placentia, who has been confined to his home for some weeks past with an internal malady which at times has threatened the worst of consequences. A surgical operation to be performed in Los Angeles has been considered necessary. We hope soon to see Mr. Staley quite himself again.

—A letter has been received from Mr. Littlefield of the Cocopah party of prospectors, written from Lerdo, seventy-five miles across the Mexican line below Yuma. He writes that the party had reached that point all right, that they have eleven mules and thirty-nine burros, and all hands are well. Ed Morgan killed a five-foot rattlesnake while gathering up wood to build a fire for supper.

—There are 4,300 names upon the Great Register, an increase of upwards of a thousand over the number two years ago. But many of the names are those of voters who have moved away or have died. These names were not stricken from the Register, and in the single precinct of Westminster it is said there are fifty-six names of voters who have moved away since the last election.

—The Supervisors have determined to gravel the county road between Polhemus' and the Santa Ana bridge, and the Olive road between this city and the Olive bridge, and in another column ask for bids for hauling the gravel for the work. They also ask for bids for constructing a portion of the Newport Beach, Tustin and El Modena county road. Here is an opportunity for some of our teamsters and contractors to get a good job working at their own figures for the county.

—Mr. Sam Federman makes periodical visits to Anaheim since his removal to Los Angeles—it being impossible for him to stay away. When we get in our new electric lights we apprehend that he will find existence here so much more delightful than in the Angelic City that on one of his visits he will quite forget to return and will remain with us permanently.

—The Board of Supervisors met on Monday, when an application for a saloon license was received from James G. Garrison, executor of the Sanford Johnson estate, from Tustin, and, no protest being filed against it, it was granted. The petition of J. Fiscus and John W. Hunt, asking that the road running between the lands of Hart and Hanna and Fiscus & Vaughn, in the Anaheim road district, be straightened and put over on the section line, was, on motion, referred to Supervisor Schorn. The clerk was instructed to advertise for bids for hauling 500 yards, more or less, of gravel on the Anaheim road, at a point commencing at the west corner of Ford's ranch and running to the Southern Pacific Railroad, not less than twenty yards to be delivered each day, the bids to be opened next Monday. Bids are also to be received on the same date for the hauling of 300 yards of gravel on the Anaheim and Olive bridge between Olive and Anaheim, not less than twenty yards to be delivered per day. The clerk was also instructed to advertise for bids for the construction of a portion of the Newport Beach and Tustin and El Modena county road, as per specifications on file with the County Clerk, the bids to be opened on Monday. The County Auditor was instructed to draw warrants in favor of D. Rogers for $25, T. Packard for $40 and W. Graham for $20 for damages for right-of-way for the Bolsa ditch road, the warrants to be drawn on the Westminster road fund. Petition of J. S. Damron and others, asking for a new road in the Newhope road district, commencing at the northeast corner of section 20, township 5 south, range 10 west, and running thence west for two miles. Referred to Supervisor Hawkins.

—We greatly regret to hear of the sudden death of Nestor Stamps, for many years a compositor on the Los Angeles Herald. Nestor came of a family of printers, all of them known technically as "swift" compositors, and he was probably the most speedy of them all. His fame was known far and wide at one time as probably among the most rapid type-setters in the country. He was a gentleman of estimable traits of mind and heart, and his untimely end will bring sorrow not only to his family and associates but to those who knew him and labored with him long ago as well.

—The most delightful social feature of the season was the party given at the parlors of the Del Campo Wednesday evening by Mr. and Mrs. Rust and Miss Horstman, the first appearance of the latter charming young lady since her period of mourning, when progressive hearts held the boards. The rooms were tastefully decorated with chrysanthemums and evergreens, and the large assemblage present entered into the spirit of enjoyment without stint. Mrs. Sydmer Ross and Arthur Lewis took the head prizes, Miss Bailey and Charley Landell the progressive, and Mrs. Perdomo and Mr. Lochman the boobys. Refreshments were served and later an impromptu hop was enjoyed in the dining-room.

—Commencing November 4th, there will be two overland trains to the East daily via the Santa Fe route. The new schedule materially shortens the time between Southern California and Chicago and all eastern points. The train leaving Southern California in the evening carries vestibuled Pullman sleeping cars through to Chicago without change, and is only three days on the road. The morning train carries upholstered Pullman Tourist sleeping cars through without change, arriving in Chicago in the evening, a saving of about ten hours in time over the old schedule, and making direct connection in Union depot for eastern points. In addition to those trains, the local service has been greatly augmented under the new time table.

—David Williams and George Lowery engaged in a rough and tumble fight at Westminster on election day, but the scrap was not on account of politics. Lowery had for a year or so past been engaged in the fine business of circulating malicious reports of Williams' sister, who is known far and wide as being a most estimable young lady, and although the report had reached her brother's ears, he had never had an opportunity of meeting with Lowery until the latter came up to vote on election day. Then Williams thrashed him unmercifully, as he ought to have done, and the latest returns of Lowery's injuries foot up a couple of blackened optics, a broken nose and a plurality of front teeth defeated. He will recover, but will no doubt leave the young lady whom he has slandered severely alone in future. Good for Williams!

—If the sprigs of gentility who attend the Saturday night hops at Music Hall could by some process of reasoning persuade themselves that it is not absolutely necessary for them to yell their daylights out when they withdraw from the hall and issue forth upon the sidewalks, we think it would conduce more to the peace and quiet of that high-class yet rudely shocked locality, as well as conspiring to raise them in the expressions of esteem of the girls up stairs, not to mention those likewise of the police, who may be tempted for a consideration to lie in wait for them on a repetition of the offense and subject them to the dire indignity of running them in. We know you are having a lot of fun, boys, and are dancing with the girls with the holes in their stockings, and we should like to be with you to give a yell for Estee ourselves, but give us a little less yelling, boys, now that the election is over, give us a little less yelling. The next dance will be a toot step.

—The orange growers of Placentia met at the school house on November 3rd at 10 A. M., in response to a call by President Crowther, to discuss the advisability of reorganizing for the ensuing season. There was a good attendance and it very soon developed that the growers were unanimously in favor of reorganization. Plans for organizing on a sound and substantial basis were discussed—the good points of last year being held to, and the mistakes avoided. A subscription list for stock in the association was introduced and circulated by Mr. W. F. Botsford, and all present signed it.

Mr. W. M. McFadden was appointed to circulate the subscription list among the growers not present, and it is now assumed that practically all the growers of Placentia and Fullerton will stand together in the sale of their crops.

Mr. Botsford was appointed a committee of one to prepare by-laws and draw up all necessary papers for the incorporation of the association which will be presented at the next meeting, Saturday, November 10th, at 10 A. M., at the same place.

The Board of City Trustees met in adjourned session on Monday evening, present Trustees Rust, Lewis, Helmsen and McWilliams.

The Committee on Public Improvements reported the purchase of a team of horses from Mr. Stubbs for $212, and also a Studebaker wagon.

Offers to act as driver of the team were received as follows: Chas. Womaer, $40 per month; J. J. Jeans, $65; Oscar Warling, $40; Al Smith, $45. The committee was given permission to employ one of the applicants.

The committee was also instructed to receive bids for the laying of an inch water pipe on Hedwig street, between Center and Chartres.

An asphaltum culvert was ordered put in from Dr. Higgins' corner on Center street to that of Mr. Deutsch's property opposite.

The Ordinance Committee introduced Resolution No. 10, ordering street work on Los Angeles street, between Center and Cypress. The resolution is the same as Resolution No 9, passed at the last meeting, but which was found defective, and necessitated the passing of the revised resolution.

The electric light committee reported favorably on the examination of several plants in Los Angeles, Santa Monica and Whittier.

The committee has advertised for bids to construct the plant, and the indications are that we shall shortly have the lights in operation.

Chester Spencer addressed the board in behalf of the water company in regard to the action of the Trustees in taking steps to eject the water company from Sycamore street, which matter is now in course of amicable settlement.

A communication was received from the water company relating to the bridge in rear of Mr. McWilliams' residence, stating that the company had been of the opinion that the ditch was a private one, but have since learned that it is company property. They have the matter under consideration, and will probably apply for a franchise for all their ditches in the city limits.

The Clerk was instructed to advertise for bids for the erection of an electric light plant, the same to be opened on the 27th instant.

The Committee on Public Improvements was empowered to build a stable at the water works for the team of horses recently purchased. The old well pit at the water works was ordered filled in.

The application of Nona Kellar for a liquor license to carry on a saloon in the Koll block building on Los Angeles street was denied. The board evidently were of the opinion that we have a sufficient number of saloons in town, and as this saloon has come to be a disreputable resort, they are quite right in denying the application for a license. A Mexican fight occurred in the place Sunday evening, and the place has come to be the resort of disreputable men and women masquerading at nights in men attire, and the whole caboodle ought to be run out of town.

PERSONAL MENTION.

John Hart, the well-known Los Angeles impressario, was in town on Monday renewing old acquaintances.

Sheriff Lacy was in town yesterday, summoning jurors. Lacy is one of the good men who was caught in the snowstorm.

—Bishop Nichols will hold confirmation services at St. Michael's church in this city next Tuesday evening. Four young ladies will be confirmed.

Mrs. Holmes of Los Angeles is expected down to-day on a two weeks' visit to her sister, Mrs. Hartung, during Mr. Hartung's sojourn in San Francisco.

Mr. Perry has a force of carpenters engaged at work upon the Orangethorpe school, a commodious two-story building which speaks volumes for the public spirit of that progressive locality, and which will be a conspicuous ornament to its section of country. The contract calls for the edifice to be completed January 1st, but Mr. Perry tells us he will have it finished probably by the 1st of December.

Mr. Stadtegger informs us that in the absentee ownership prevalent at Yorba, as well as the inability of most of the residents, being educated in Spanish, to read English, it is exceedingly difficult to procure an election board conforming to all the minor requirements of the law, mention of which was made in these columns last week. Under the personal supervision and instruction of Mr. Stadtegger, however, himself an accountant and clerical expert second to none in the county, there can be no question as to the authenticity as well as the perfect legality of the returns, and when the intelligence of the Yorba people is taken into account, there is of course no doubt that there was in every respect a free ballot and a fair count. The Yorba returns are all right, even if they do show a slight Democratic cast of countenance.

Billy Rowland, ex-sheriff of Los Angeles county, was in town Saturday evening and in company of a gathering of friends related some interesting old-time experiences in Anaheim during the early days. It is twenty years or more since Billy first ran for sheriff and was triumphantly elected, and in his day he apprehended some of the most dangerous criminals that ever infested any county. He has long since retired to private life, and is at present enjoying the emoluments of an honest farmer's life up in the Puente hills, where he is interested in the twenty-nine oil wells that are yielding a bonanza regularly every month. Mr. Rowland is a quiet and unassuming gentleman, under the medium stature, and no one not conversant with his valorous record as a brave officer and intrepid fighter of criminals would take him to be the successful sheriff of a boisterous period wherein for a long time we had a man for breakfast every morning. That he rendered a good account of himself in putting down lawlessness is known to all old-timers, and many's the friend in Anaheim who is glad to meet him and recount the experiences of the happy time of long ago.

—Last Sunday evening at the Presbyterian church the pastor Rev. Theo. Beaizley preached from Matt. 22c. 21 v. The preacher considered the matter of voting at Tuesday's election. Shall religion or politics be our guide? A good deal is said against mixing religion with politics. Many politicians have no religion, so there is nothing to mix with, and others are so badly mixed that they cannot be worse than they are. Christ said Render unto Cesar, that is politics, and Render unto God; that is religion. The same men were to do both. The men who tried to entrap Christ were professional politicians. They were devoid of principle; to insure success they tried to fuse two antagonistic elements. Modern politicians try to do the same thing. They ignore the true solution to every question, which is the moral principle involved in the question. Find the moral principle underlying it, there you find ground for safe action. This country today is overrun with small politicians. Statesmen are very scarce. The mere politician is a wire pulling time-server who has not two ideas outside party and office. If there is a class of men of whom we have good cause to be afraid, it is the oily smooth-tongued demagogue, the professional politician. If there is a man on earth whose character should be formed of sterling honesty, whose doings should scrupulously conform to moral principles, it is the man who undertakes to manage our public affairs, or who wants to show us how to do it. Of the wire pulling politician we find he must of necessity have a double character.

The Darkey's View of It.

A Kentucky lawyer was standing on the steps of the Covington postoffice the other day, when an old colored man came up, and, touching his hat, asked, "Kin you tell me is dis de place where dey sells postage stamps?" "Yes, sir, this is the place," replied the lawyer, seeing a chance for a little quiet fun; "but what do you want with postage stamps, uncle?" "To mail a letter sah, of course." "Well, then, you needn't bother about stamps; you don't have to put any on this week." "I don't?" "No, sir." "Why—for not?" "Well, you see, the conglomeration of the hypothenuse has differentiated the parallelogram so much that the consanguinity don't emulate the ordinary effervescence, and so the Government has decided to send letters free." The old man took off his hat dubiously, shook his head, and then, with a long breath, remarked: "Well boss, all dat may be true, an' I don't say it an't, but just s'posen dat de eckcentricity of the aggregation transubstantiates the ignominiousness of the puppindickler and the initiative and referendum and imperative mandate, and sublimates de puspicuty of the consequences—don't you qualificate dat de Government would confiscate dat dare letter? I guess I'd better put some stamps on anyhow, fer luck!" And the old man passed solemnly down the street.

KEEPING A ROSE'S COMPANY.

A traveler, toiling on a weary way,
Found in his path a piece of fragrant clay.
"This seems but common earth," said he, "but how Delightful—it is full of sweetness now!
Whence is thy fragrance?" From the clay there grows

DIGGING A PIT.

It would be difficult to find a more charming retreat from heat, noise and fashion—those three essentials to a popular summer resort—than Ashland-Among-the-Hills. Its climate well merits the encomium of "salubrious," which the hotel prospectus originally conferred upon it. And yet when young Mrs. Dupont told Mason Welles of her impending departure thither she announced the place as "poky" and its indwellers as "frights." "Men are so selfish," Alice continued in half querulous complaint, "just because Paul delights to burn the bridge of his nose into a peel on that ridiculous lake trying to catch fish, not there, in the first place, and too wise to bite, in the second, I must endure the chatter of mothers about their babies and the gasps of invalids over the ozone. It's too provoking! There are heirs and airs, but their incessant discussion is not my ideal of enjoyment."

Supposing a friend should attempt the diversion of a new subject by venturing into this wilderness," suggested the gallant Mason.

"Then a friend would be too doomed as a friend indeed," replied Alice, with a smile more coquettish than the meaning of her impulsive little heart.

For young Mrs. Dupont was not accustomed to weigh her words—on the principle, likely, that such scant weight would be an abomination. It was so much easier to utter them just as they flashed over her mind. What becomes of a bubble when it bursts? Thank goodness, sounds had not a writing's power of manifolding and repetition. In certain silent wakeful hours, however, when she couldn't keep from meditation, Alice would be ashamed of some such idle speech and relieved that its echoes had surely died away. She did not realize that the memory of a vain man is a phonograph ever in readiness and ever retentive.

Alice truly felt that she had a grievance against her husband, not that Paul wasn't faithful and kind and generous and all the rest of the orthodox virtues. Sometimes she hated his amiable quialities, not only for being virtuous, but also for their orthodoxy. But there was too much assumption about his regard. One did not quite like to be treated as a collector's specimen, to be eagerly sought after, but when gained labeled and placed on a shelf. Courtship had been too pleasant to Alice to be dismissed as an episode. From her view it should remain as a precedent.

The very charm of Paul the lover militated against Paul the husband. Then he had been zealous, ardent, intent only on her happiness now he was grave, abstracted, absorbed with the editing of his Scientific Review, acceding to her wishes with a "Yes, my dear," and "Certainly, my love," but regarding them and her, too, as interruptions. Would not a brute with a club be preferable? There surely was an advantage in being noticed.

"I suppose those everlasting Mantell twins will be there," remarked Alice on the train when she was wearied of eliminating telegraph poles from the scenery.

"Eh? Ah! What's that, my dear?" queried Paul, not missing a line in a frumpery contemporary critique. "Oh, yes, I presume so."

"I believe," cried Alice, swinging around her chair indignantly, "if I said Beelzebub would be there in full caudal regalia you would say: 'Eh? Ah! I presume so.'"

"I presume so, my dear," replied Paul automatically.

Now, the everlasting Mantell twins, Sophronia and Abigail, found the mountains and woodlands roundabout Ashland commensurate preserves for their intellectual propensities. Had they been as latent as seitzen as they were early wisdom they might have been deemed quite pretty, but devotion to geology and botany had divested them of all adorning superfluities, and, beyond a common expression of surprise resultant from pinching eyeglasses and tantly drawn hair, they lacked individuality. A hammer or a forked wand can never become a substitute for the girdle of Venus. Now, if these girls had ever shared a thought more congruous with the latter than with either of the former it was one of most respectful admiration toward Paul Dupont.

A real editor, a Minos and Rhadamanthus combined, with the soul of fence stirred in, who passed unalterable judgments on trembling authors, was a very Jove to them. Why, perhaps some day their aspirations, concentrated through pen and ink and paper, might be brought before him. Thus far this Jove had retained the panoply of his glories for them, and they had worshiped from afar, yet this humility had not prevented them from exchanging many a shrewd condolence over the incompatibility and grossness of his Juno, which Juno, with that unerring intuition that makes many a giddy young woman disdainful of reason, had not failed to perceive.

One glance over the dining room on their arrival assured Alice that all the "frights" were present. The Mantell sisters were at the same little table in the corner, with hair and eyeglasses straining out surprise, as if they were just finishing the chicken begun the summer before. Nor would that infuriated fowl suffer any wrong from such a hypothesis.

"There are your favorites," remarked Alice.

"Eh? Ah! Oh, yes, I presume so," muttered Paul.

He was not at all alarmed when his wife hastily left the table. Her appetite was too capricious for calculation. Its curve would have furnished the most fantastic wall paper design in the world. It was a nibble here and a bite there; a chair now and a bonbon then; a macaroon shortly and an ice after a little. One might just as well set stated meals for a canary. When, therefore, after a deliberate combination, he found her in an easy chair at the angle of the piazza, with a novel open on her lap and her toilet effectively arranged, Paul remembered that there had been her favorite seat the summer before and felt convinced that she was having a good time. So he turned his attention to the subject of fishing. There was a boat to be engaged, and choice pools to be discussed, and tackle to be arranged. Thenceforward, with the calm conscience of a model husband, he devoted himself to his sport. Perhaps an allignment of the net proceeds would have been an ado about nothing, for he generally forgot to bait the hook. But what would you have?

The warmth of the sun seemed to renew his tired brain; the breeze inspired strength. In the quiet or sparkle of the water he saw the continuance of peace partly or the advent of success. Had any one asked him how Alice had spent her time he would have regarded the questioner rude and inquiring as to one first letter of the alphabet. "Why, as all women do, I presume," he would have answered, rather querulously. "She reads and embroiders and drives and plays tennis, and there are hops and music, you know. Mercy, she's so busy I see but little of her." And Alice, sitting disconsolately on the piazza, appreciated how busy they were in actual association and how tedious were the remaining hours, and one day, recognizing a tall form approaching her from the road, with the strides of unfeigned joy, she vowed that Paul, too, should wonder and wait and grow lonely.

The following afternoon, when Paul was returning from the lake, he crossed through the woods to the main road. As he was standing on the bank, half hidden by the underbrush from the road below, there came a rumble, the tattoo of hoofs and a merry song interspersed with bursts of jocund laughter. A four-in-hand coach swung along, all alight with daisy colors. Such an array of pretty women and gallant men! They might well be pilgrims of pleasure bound for Calypso's isle. And oh high, in the rear, looking down with her cruise, sat pursed in the very face of a smug and smiling swain, sat Alice.

Recognition gets its swiftest impulse from dislike. We may mistake a friend, but we often feel an enemy before we see him. Not that Paul regarded Mason Welles in so serious an aspect. He simply disapproved of him with that contempt which consoles the tortoise for the gracefulness of the hare.

"I see that man Welles is here," said Paul to Alice when they met in that domestic forum, their room.

"Eh? Ah! Yes, oh, yes!" she replied. "Will he remain long?"

"I presume so," continued the young woman mischievously.

Paul colored visibly, despite the exertions of the sun. He felt ridicule the more because he was utterly unable to return it in kind. Some fond, true natures cannot change, except through a convulsion, and then they change radically. The nearest shade of difference from a caress becomes a downright blow. Alice proceeded hurriedly, excusing and thus accusing: "I know you will be pleased, Paul, to hear me say that I like this place so much better. The people here are impossible, of course, except for a spelling bee or a funeral, but there is such a right jolly party staying over at the Maples, friends of Mr. Welles, you know. They were in despair for a chaperon until they found me. Now, just keep on fishing and give yourself no further concern regarding my welfare. We take a moonlight sail tomorrow night, and Saturday we drive to the Summit, with dinner at the Half Way House. So be a dear, fussy old bachelor all you please." And Alice glitted from the room humming a snatch of the song to which she had beaten time so blithely.

Paul stood before the glass with his collar half fastened. There was a comical expression of consternation on the reflected face, which made him laugh, but not merrily. "A fussy old bachelor!" So such was the verdict on his endeavors as a model husband! Perhaps a man could work more steadfastly and plan more cautiously and give more generously than he! Doubtless that grinning idiot whose eyes ought to begin to water for the wringing his nose would surely get was a more fit object to be loved, honored and obeyed! Come, now, if contrariety was required, by Jove, he would furnish it!

Old and fussy, indeed! When, two years since, he had been in truth a bachelor, only his absurd ideas of devotion had kept him free from many charming allurements. And now, after the sixth collar had been appropriately sacrificed to his choler, Paul finished his labors and descended to the piazza quite satisfied with the results. Alice was nowhere to be seen. Doubtless she was rehearsing those duties which should save that right jolly party from despair, but there was one of the Mantell twins, Sophronia, the geologist, looking mighty fine, too, and smiling a timid greeting to him such as a man of his distinction merited. He drew a chair to her side and began that analysis of the weather which is the sherry and bitters to a friendly chat. After he had gulped this decoction Paul continued: "I can't remember to have ever before seen you apart from your sister. You are the inseparables, you know."

"Abigail was engaged with a tiresome seamstress," Sophronia exclaimed, "and I really felt the need of the air, and so"——

"And so my lucky star brought you hither," interrupted Paul gallantly.

"Yes," murmured the girl, "it was fate that united us once more."

Paul started and flushed with amazement. What the deuce could that mean? Was this one of those highly respectable and decorous Mantell girls whom he had often been fain to hold up as examples to Alice? Yes, he could not doubt his eyes, however much he might his ears, although she seemed changed. Her glasses were off, and there was a tender expression on her face, as if her back hair were becoming undone. She was leaning toward him, too, as if in need of that "holding up" process. Decidedly a shift of subject was necessary, so that he might gain an interval to think.

"It's about time for that dinner bell to ring," blurted the wretched man.

"Don't mention time, dearest," breathed Sophronia, "when we have an eternity of bliss before us."

Paul sprang to his feet aghast and gasping. "Really, Miss Sophronia, really Miss Mantell, this won't do at all. You must excuse me if I leave you at once. There is some dreadful misapprehension. What if any one should overhear? Think"——

"Yes," agreed Sophronia, staying his arm, "you are right. We must dissemble. But let me go, not you. Here comes Abigail. Your greeting will allay her suspicions. Farewell until a kinder hour. Be our watchword secrecy and trust." And with a smile which Juliet would have deemed unseemly she tripped away.

"Poor thing," he soliloquized, "poor child! So young, so fair! She has gone crazy, and evidently I alone am aware of it. Now, what is my duty? Hodges, the proprietor, who has the girls in special care, is away for a week. But here comes Abigail. How composed, how sensible her bearing! I must break the sad intelligence to her. Luckily her strong mind will temper grief with good judgment."

And yet, even as Paul resolved, there was a certain unwonted sprightliness becoming apparent in Miss Abigail's approach which caused vague apprehension.

"My dear young lady," he began, and his nervousness lent ardor to his words, "I am inexpressibly thankful to see you. There is a subject, delicate, closely intimate, on which I must speak."

"Yes," whispered Abigail, with downcast eyes, "I think I understand"——

"Your sister"——

"You fear she may suspect? Yes, there is to danger. We must be cautious. We must dissemble. We must meet as strangers"——

"Good Lord!" groaned Paul.

"There, darling, don't be impatient. I know it's hard, but perfect trust is such courage. Remember our motto in the dear old days, 'Semper Fidelis.' See, I will set an example of prudence." And, coyly touching her forefinger to her lips, Abigail likewise tripped away.

"I see how it is," concluded Paul gloomily after a moment's pondering. "I am going daft myself—overwork and worry, I suppose. Perhaps, though, the mood malady may be checked in its inception. I will go to my room and take every sort of pellet in our medicine box. I shall surely thus get the right one. But despite this diagnosis he wafted to the open window of the smoking room and looked in, in fear lest some one might have heard these conversations, if perchance they had wrought no harm. As he failed to look behind the door, however, he saw no one, and so went away satisfied in his most unsatisfactory secrecy. Had he looked behind the door he would have seen Mason Welles, and from the expression of his face not only have been reassured as to the guiltlessness of these conversations, but warned as to the use that unscrupulous young man would make of his knowledge.

Mason Welles had indeed been a witness, and an expert one, too, for he had known the Mantell girls from their childhood, and now, as he reviewed the singularity of their single conduct, he was able to trace its course. He remembered long ago hearing his father, Dr. Welles, shrewd old physician that he was, discuss the idiosyncrasy of the Mantell twins. "Those children are not simpletons," his parent had said. "Together they possess all the faculties. The trouble is that certain ones, due to the mysterious intimacy of their birth, they hold in common. Separately each one is apt to grin and caper like an idiot. I do not believe that any education, however thorough, can eradicate this silliness. But when they are kept in company, as they should be, this perversion not only disappears, but they are utterly oblivious that it ever existed. In fact, one is the complement of the other. Together they form the perfect circle of common sense. The remedy is, and I have impressed it on their parents, to make them to all intents and purposes Siamese twins."

Years had passed since childish pranks had provoked his father's speech, and since then Mason had seen the girls develop into the fullness of cultured young womanhood, and he had forgotten that there had been a time when their sanity had been a topic for sympathizing friends. Now, for a truth, he remembered it all, as he also remembered that until this hour he had not seen them apart. Now, through deduction, he comprehended that together the sisters had entertained a highly proper and respectful admiration for Paul Dupont, which had affected each of them when separated thus diastrously. "If that little witch of an Alice could witness their fond attentions," Mason commented, "perhaps she would abandon her abominable pretense of prudery." And upon this hypothesis he began to scheme a demonstration.

To Paul in his course of treatment came no such clarity of vision. But since his head remained unaffected, however much his stomach did suffer, he gained a slight approximation to the situation. Evidently what had happened had happened, incredible though it appeared. The solution rested solely with old Hodges. Until his return he was helpless. Unless—why, of course, unless he could play one sister against the other. Each had asserted the necessity of dissembling. Undoubtedly, then, if he could associate with them jointly the old formality would continue, and, better still, he would be relieved from the dreadful apprehension of a separate encounter. Perhaps, too, that object which had provoked his approach to Sophronia might also be achieved. For the next few days fishing was neglected, and Paul combined the outdoor study of botany and geology.

So marked a change in her husband's avocation did not escape Alice's sharp, bright eyes. When she commented on his "taste for curios," as she termed it, Paul's abstracted "Eh? Ah! I presume so" seemed more a disguise than a slight. In a word, she grew suspicious, jealous, unhappy, lamenting as lost what she had not cared to hold and burning to prove beyond a cavil that which she would give worlds to disbelieve. That right jolly party became a compound of inanity and Mason Welles easily its quintessence. However, when this beautiful young man, in his pursuit of the vicarious mote, suggested a jaunt to the summit, artfully mentioning that the Mantell girls were going and adding, "and of course Mr. Dupont," Alice agreed with an eagerness which he misinterpreted, for her "delighted" should have been taken as "heartbroken." Nor was this the only error that Mason made. He offended the twins' sense of decorum, supersensitive in its entirety, by a jocular reference to their intimacy with Paul.

"I detest that Mr. Welles," said Sophronia frigidly.

"He is abhorrent to all ideas of decency," agreed Abigail.

If fatel Mason, not to have applied discrimination to his own case! If such was their united judgment, what might not be their individual impulse? But no man while digging a pit ever whistled more merrily than he. "When we get there," he meditated, "I'll manage to separate the girls, and it will be hard if I can't arrange to have Dupont come across one of them while pretty Alice is looking on. And then"——

So settled was Mason in the certainty of laughing last that he regarded with composure the way in which the party took seats in the great mountain wagon, though it was hardly in accord with his desire, for Paul and Alice were side by side, like Darby and Joan, with the Mantell sisters as prim and demure neighbors. "The return will be slightly different," he mused, with a triumphant smile, "and it will be their turn to."

Compunction for two unintended wrongs had drawn Paul to Alice. Belated appreciation and poignant regret had dragged Alice close to Paul. To the infinite repugnance of the twins, this couple incontinently indulged in soft and cooing phrases, and more than once on the drive were undeniably holding hands. And, still worse, when there was a heavy jolt Paul embraced Alice with exaggerated tenderness, although she was safe and secure in an interior corner, and the unprotected maidens who should have been his care were bobbing up and down like electric balls. Ere the destination was reached that respectful admiration which the Mantell girls had shared for Paul Dupont had faded away, its place permanently retained by indifferent contempt.

"Sappy!" whispered Sophronia.

"Spoons!" concurred Abigail.

But hapless Mason Welles was unaware of these changes of sentiment; otherwise when the cloth was spread on the ground and the hampers were in process of unlading he would not have been so intent on sending Paul hither and thither and on employing the Mantell girls with disjunctive errands. His eagerness, too, prevented him from perceiving that Alice was studying his manœuvers with doubt and aversion. Everything seemed to be working in perfection. Paul was engrossed with a kettle, some damp kindlings and a broken match down in the ravine, hid from the sight of every one excepting his wife. Sophronia had been invested on the heights after berries and Abigail down the road to the farmhouse for milk, each sister believing that the other was close by.

"I'll take a sly at Sophronia first," Mason resolved. "There's more of the March hare about her, I think." And he clambered up the rocks to her side.

"Look down there," he said, pointing to Paul. "There is your darling quite alone."

Sophronia glared. "What, you empty pated fop!" she screamed. "Do you think you can insult me with impunity? Take that!" and she cast the pail of berries full in his face.

Mason did not await further eccentricities. He sped like a chamois down the mountain side until he came upon Abigail.

"Your sister!" he exclaimed. "Look our for her! She's crazier than a loon!"

"Insolent puppy!" retorted Abigail, and the milk blended with the berries.

Mason turned and fled, in fear of other singularities; but, alas, where could he find shelter? Down the path was stalking the vengeful Sophronia; close behind him panted the indomitable Abigail. In a flurry of terror he bounded to Alice's side. "Save me, Alice, from these harridans!" he implored.

"Really, Mr. Welles," said Mrs. Dupont scornfully, "you are quite as ridiculous as you look. Wait a moment, and my husband will take care of you and of me too."

But Mason did not wait. Far down the roadway he saw the Mantell twins soberly plodding to the hotel, and he realized that in their union lay his strength. He followed, but at a distance, and when they had reached the destination he hurried to the railway station and took the train for a distant one. And Paul never consulted Hodges, the proprietor, about the sanity of the twins. They ignored him, pursuing their studies with a unity that no surgeon's knife could eradicate. Neither does he reply as formerly to Alice's gentle questions, for, in a proper appreciation of felicity, he has lost all presumption.—New York Times.
